Employability: identity and student agency

How to cite:

For guidance on citations see FAQs.

© 2021 Michael McCormick

https://creativecommons.org/licenses/by/4.0/

Version: Poster

Copyright and Moral Rights for the articles on this site are retained by the individual authors and/or other copyright owners. For more information on Open Research Online’s data policy on reuse of materials please consult the policies page.

oro.open.ac.uk
Employability: identity and student agency
A phenomenological case study

Mick McCormick – EdD doctoral researcher
Mick.mccormick@open.ac.uk

Background

- Critical appraisal of employability frameworks
- Where does the student fit in?
- What does the student say?
- Does it support emerging student identity?

Research Questions

- What are the effects of engagement with courses where employability has been embedded into the curriculum?
- What are the benefits of engagement with employability over the course of study and beyond?
- How effective is employability in developing different types of capital to support emerging identities?

Method and data collection

- Phenomenological methodology
- Semi structured interviews
- Interpretative Phenomenological Analysis (IPA)

Emerging themes

- Micro: What do students say about employability – what do they make of it? Can we develop a more sophisticated approach to employability which engages student rather than sees student as an object being made ‘employable’?
- Meso: impact on institutional approaches to employability (University, Faculty, Qualification)
- Macro: influence debate and direction of employability narrative at national policy level

References

Acknowledgements: thanks to Duncan Banks and Ray Chatwin – EdD supervisors - for their expert input and guidance