Text and performance: medieval religious stage quacks and the commedia dell’arte

How to cite:

For guidance on citations see FAQs.

© [not recorded]
Version: Version of Record

Link(s) to article on publisher’s website:

Copyright and Moral Rights for the articles on this site are retained by the individual authors and/or other copyright owners. For more information on Open Research Online’s data policy on reuse of materials please consult the policies page.

oro.open.ac.uk
Inhaltsverzeichnis

INGRID KASTEN
Transformationen des Religiösen. Performativität und Textualität im geistlichen Spiel ............................................................. VII

I. Das geistliche Spiel als cultural performance

ERIKA FISCHER-LICHTE
Theater und Fest – Anmerkungen zum Verhältnis von Theatralität und Ritualität in den geistlichen Spielen des Mittelalters .............. 3

ECKEHARD SIMON
Geistliche Fastnachtsspiele. Zum Grenzbereich zwischen geistlichem und weltlichem Spiel ............................................................. 18

JUTTA EMING
Simultaneität und Verdoppelung. Motivationsstrukturen im geistlichen Spiel .................................................................. 46

GLENN EHRSTINE
Präsenzverwaltung: Die Regulierung des Spielrahmens durch den Proklamator und andere expositores ludi .................. 63

WERNER RÖCKE
Maria Magdalena und Judas Ischarioth. Das Alsfelder Passionsspiel und die Erläuter Spiele als Experimentierfelder des Bösen und soziokultureller Standards im Spätmittelalter ......................... 80

II. Performativität und Textualität

M. A. KATRITZKY
Text and Performance: Medieval Religious Stage Quacks and the Commedia dell’Arte .................................................. 99

JODY ENDERS
The Devil in the Flesh of Theater .......................................... 127

CHRISTIAN KIENING
Präsenz – Memoria – Performativität. Überlegungen
im Blick auf das Innsbrucker Fronleichnamsspiel ..................... 139
CORNELIA HERBERICH
Lektüren des Performativen. Zur Medialität geistlicher Spiele des Mittelalters .................................................. 169

III. Transformationen des Religiösen – Inszenierungen des Heiligen

ANDREAS KOTTE
Vom Verschwinden der Texte angesichts des Wunders. Wirkungsstrategien im geistlichen Spiel ........................................... 189

ELKE KOCH
Inszenierungen des Heiligen. Spielspezifische Strategien am Beispiel hessischer Passionsspiele ........................................... 201

KLAUS KRÜGER
Bild und Bühne. Dispositive des imaginären Blicks .................................................. 218

CLEMENTS RISI

JENS ROSelt
Transformationen des Religiösen im zeitgenössischen Theater .................................................. 264

Register .............................................................................................................. 280
Namen, Orte, Werke .......................................................................................... 280
Sachen .............................................................................................................. 284

INGRID KASTEN
Transformationen des Religiösen
Performativität und Textualität im geistlichen Spiel

Die Tagung konnte an die seit einiger Zeit deutlich belebte Diskussion über die Spezifizität theatricaler Formen in Mittelalter und früher Neuzeit anknüpfen.
M. A. KATRITZKY

Text and Performance
Medieval Religious Stage Quacks and the Commedia dell’Arte

Introduction

Quacks were the least respectable and respected medieval healers. Themselves significant promoters of professional stage spectacle, they are the earliest and most prominent non-biblical characters in religious drama, where they make an increasing contribution from the twelfth century onwards (see Appendix). Situated on a broad continuum seamlessly bridging the gaping chasm between the solidly respectable municipal merchant or medical practitioner and reviled, rootless charlatans and mountebanks, quacks combined, in widely varying proportions, three elements: the medical, the itinerant, and the theatrical. They sold herbs, drugs, patent miracle-cures with closely guarded secret recipes, and cosmetics. Some also prescribed and administered medication and treatment to patients, either for a variety of ailments or as specialists. They were itinerant, in that they went to their customers, rather than waiting for customers to come to them. Some travelled continuously across the length and breadth of Europe, from one annual fair to another, some within their own country or region, others only intermittently, or hardly at all. Above all, quacks were performers. They used theatricality, in its widest possible sense, to attract customers and to promote and advertise their pharmaceuticals and... health care services. Contextualized within the deceitful economy of the marketplace, religious stage quacks provide a profane secular counterpart to the healing Christ of the Gospel miracles. As grotesques and gargoyles proliferated in late medieval Northern church decoration, so comic episodes caricaturing the medical inadequacies, cupidity and crude humour of quacks came to dominate its religious drama. Typically, they feature during the Visitatio sepulchri, or visit of the three Marys to the tomb of Christ. Here, in an episode known as the merchant scene, an itinerant pedlar, variously characterized as a masticār, medicus, mercator or unguentarius, with or without a wife and troupe, sometimes sells the Marys herbs and spices before they go to embalm Christ's body, and discover the empty tomb.

Religious quack episodes occur most frequently in connection with the three Marys' need for unguents at the tomb of Christ, and they are often considered primarily in terms of a response to this single liturgical requirement. The present investigation seeks to develop a pan-European holistic approach recognizing that by no means all religious stage quacks are confined to the merchant scene, and accommodating their varied narrative contexts. The fluid boundaries and synergies between the medieval religious stage and secular performance practice are perhaps nowhere more apparent than with respect to dramatic quack episodes. The present article overviews religious quacks as a whole, with a view to highlighting their resonances with the early modern professional stage (see Appendix). Specialists have sought the origins of the commedia dell'arte in a wide range of contexts, not least in classical drama, but never in any systematic way in the quack episodes of the religious stage. To a certain extent, these may even be viewed as precursors of the characteristic stage business, or lazi, of the professional stage. The comic hallmark of the commedia dell'arte performances of Italian secular professional players, lazi were self-contained expandable units of improvised stage business. Featuring stock characters, they were designed to be expanded or contracted in response to specific audiences, and to be transferrable from one play to another with minimal modification. Many centuries before their adoption by professional performing troupes, religious quack episodes pioneered stock roles with predictable verbal, visual and physical comic routines, and the clear potential for improvisation. Although such dramatic strategies foreshadow the professional stage in several significant ways, only one has received widespread recognition. This concerns the stock quack assistant Rubin, often identified as a forerunner of the stock stage fools of the itinerant professionals, such as the English troupe's Picklehering or Jean Potage, or the Harlequin or Zanni of the Italian commedia dell'arte. These stage fools made a major impact as the servant character who joins his master and a young female as one of the three stock roles whose stars rose in the sixteenth century, just as the power of church drama was fading. They dominated professional Italian drama throughout the early modern period as the central commedia dell'arte trio of master, servant and inamorata. One of the most important comic configurations of professional drama, this trio was heralded by the three main stock roles of the merchant scene. These are not "the eternal triangle of the doctor, Rubin and Pusterpalk", but a far more significant, widespread and rarely identified group, the mixed-gender threesome of the quack couple and their chief assistant.

The merchant scene

The Gospel of John relates that, directly following the Crucifixion, Joseph of Arimathea and Nicodemus wound the body of Christ in linen and spices on that same evening, using a hundred pounds of myrrh and aloes provided by Nicodemus. Matthew does not mention spices at all. Luke relates that the Holy women prepared the spices on the Sabbath but observed the traditional day of rest, waiting until early on Sunday morning to take them to the tomb. Only Mark indicates that the spices for embalming Christ's body were not purchased until after Good Friday and the Sabbath: "when the Sabbath was past, Mary Magdalene, and Mary the mother of James, and Salome, had bought sweet spices, that they might come and anoint him". Notwithstanding such tenuous New Testament indications, onstage speaking quacks had already established themselves on the religious stage by the eleventh century. They were pioneered in Latin and macaronic mystery plays preserved in texts dating from around 1100 onwards, some of which specify a merchant or spice merchant, and became extremely popular, sometimes dominant non-biblical characters in the Visitatio sepulchri, the pivotal scene of medieval Easter observances and Passion performances. Widely regarded as crucial to the emergence of religious theatre from church ceremony, the Visitatio sepulchri and lish plays and religious drama are obscure, it is clear that the surviving German plays draw heavily on religious drama, often freely basing their healers on the merchant scene’s quack couple and their servants.5

Even the French literary sources which get closest to the orality of genuine medieval quack harangues, dramatic monologues of the type pioneered in the mid thirteenth-century by Rutebeuf and Adam de la Halle, postdate the earliest merchant scenes by over a century.6 In possibly the earliest known French secular drama, Halle’s Li jus Adan ou de la Feuilléée de 1262, a quack boasts of his travels and diagnoses urine.7 MATHIEU’s compelling textual investigation into the interrelationships between the merchant scene and secular literature establishes beyond doubt the dependence of French merchant scenes of the fourteenth and fifteenth centuries on Li diz de l’erbette, De la goutte en l’aîne and other quack monologues by Rutebeuf. Less convincing is his attempt to identify Rutebeuf as the secular source of the comic and satirical elements in the merchant scene, and to categorize all earlier religious stage quacks, such as those of the thirteenth-century Prague, Benedikteuern and Tours merchant scenes, as respectable sedentary ‘urban merchants’ lacking any comic elements.8 Religious stage practice was almost certainly a major influence on the dramatic quack monologues of Rutebeuf, himself author of the religious play Miracle de Théophile. His ‘secular’ monologues are likely to have drawn on his observations of stage quacks as well as genuine charlatans, and his creative and economic impetus may well have come from an awareness of the growing importance of quacks in religious drama. Hard and fast distinctions between the categories of quack and merchant, of the type proposed by MATHIEU, cannot take account of the ways in which these roles were interpreted on the stage. If some specialists suggest that comic elements first entered the merchant scene with the early fourteenth-century *Passion Pa-

---

5 JARAMILA FELTRUSKY summarizes the most significant French and German merchant scenes in _A sacred farce from medieval Bohemia: Mastichaci; Am Arbor_ 1985, p. 78-117. See also appendix, below.

7 The family-based quack troupe explicitly specified by the texts of some religious quack episodes, including the _Sponsat_, and featured in certain others whose texts include only a single speaking quack (for example the 1583 Lucerne play), reflects traditional economic practice in the itinerant healthcare industry. As such, its constituent members are neither, as suggested by some specialists, primarily dictated by religious imperative (HELMUT DE BOOR: Die Texte-schicht der lateinischen Osterfeinem, Tübingen 1967, p. 359) nor by cattle pagan precedent. _Warning_ (note 3), p. 85, elegantly turns this last theory on its head, suggesting that religious stage quacks provided a foothold for pagan elements to enter Christian drama.

---

Latinus, others, more open to non-textual factors, already detect a comic dimension to that of the thirteenth century Tourys text. It seems highly probable that well before being explicitly recorded in scripts, at least some religious productions visually exploited the comic possibilities of the quack through costume or gesture. The verbal comic possibilities are richly reflected in many later scripts. Where they are not, as in the merchant scenes of the fifteenth-century Wolfenbüttel and sixteenth-century Hall and Lucerne cycles, this may as often be a prudent response to censorship in the written version, as an accurate reflection of an absence of any comic dimension in the actual performances. In the earlier, largely Latin productions, even performing in the vernacular gave quacks, from those of the eleventh-century Sponsus onwards, hugely comic resonances for an audience used to hearing physicians mock itinerant healers for their lack of Latin.

In the merchant scene's most fully developed versions, the lone quack was replaced with a couple-led troupe, and its essentially brief selling routine to the three Marys was padded out with bawdy comic interchanges of total biblical irrelevance. In a lengthy comic scene of a largely secular nature, the troupe typically prepare and market their products. They puff their skills, barter and banter with the Holy women, crack jokes of a surprisingly robust nature, and conclude by packing up to continue their travels, often going their separate ways after a quarrel between the quack couple. In the fourteenth-century Brandenburg quack troupe, the familiar wife and second servant supplementing the stock roles Meister Yporas and his servant Pisterbalk bear the non-standard names Baptonia and Surgan, and the troupe starts with a comic drinking routine not found elsewhere. Later plays, such as those of Innsbruck (1391), Vienna (1472), Alsfeld and Erlau (fifteenth century) and Bozen (1514) increasingly standardize both the names and comic stage business of their quacks (see Appendix). The merchant scene of the Erlau Easter play, thought to originate from early fifteenth-century Kärnten in Austria, takes up the first 940 of the 1331 verses of the play's third scene. A stage direction at its very beginning, instructing the quacks' senior assistant to announce the merchant scene in prologue form, underlines its optional and improvisational nature. The Erlau merchant scene is particularly informative concerning the troupe's medical products, and the division of labour between the quack couple, Medicus and Medica. Offstage, the couple has young children and a maid, Gredlein. Onstage, they have two male assistants, a senior one called Rubinus and a junior called Pusterpalck. Medicus introduces himself at the beginning of the merchant scene as a skilled master of noble birth from Asia, lately come from Paris. He claims to have brought the troupe's medicines from Milan, Flanders and Arabia, and ends the merchant scene by leaving the stage with Pusterpalck, to 'return to Arabia'.

When the Erlau play's Medicus gives Rubinus the task of publicising his medical products and services, he starts by describing the troupe's self-manufactured pharmaceuticals and cosmetics. Assuring the crowd that they were brought by his master from distant lands, he offers them eight individually described unguents. Two are purely medical, respectively for healing wounds and physical disabilities, one is an ointment aimed at men with slothful or nagging wives, another at women with physically abusive men, and a fifth restores women's virginity. Three others are cosmetic, namely a face rouge and hair bleach for women, and a hair restorative for men. Rubinus' eulogy includes many of the standbys familiar from quack monologues, handbills and pictures. Tooth extraction, lithotomies and the administration of enemas are all alluded to in a speech which is an early and lengthy example of the quack harangue. It even includes the interpretation of urine, identified by some as the main additional comic theme differentiating the secular dramatic quack episodes of carnival farces from their closely related religious counterparts. Unusually, the Erlau play's merchant scene includes a counterpart to this speech, giving detailed insights into the abilities of the quack's wife, whose appellation, Medica, indicates her active and informed involvement in the family business. She interrupts Rubinus to request the second assistant, Pusterpalck, to enumerate her medical skills. This second monologue is largely disregarded in the older scholarship, or dismissed as a minor addition, a mere bawdy encore of Rubinus' harangue included only for comic repetition. In fact, comparison of the two monologues suggests a genuine division of labour between husband and wife, with the former covering routine surgical operations, including dental care, and the latter offering marriage guidance, coun-

---

17 RUPRECHT WIMMEL analyses typical textual components of several German merchant scenes in Deutsch und Latein im Osterspiel, Untersuchungen zu den völksprachlichen Entsprechungs-texten der lateinischen Strophenlieder, München 1974, p. 78-104.
19 Here p. 54-5, 75, 80.
20 Here p. 65-6.
21 HAMMER (note 8), p. 251.
vocal evidence that the 1514 production did feature a merchant scene, significant for establishing that the absence of quacks from religious dramatic texts does not rule out their presence in performance, has been largely overlooked. This evidence is four quacks listed in the cycle’s cast lists as being played by two pairs of relatives, and a fifth player. The quack (Medicus) and his servant (Servus medici) were played by Marx Pader and the cutler Jacob Balbier. The quack’s wife (Uxor medici) was shared by Sigmund Balbier (who lived on the main square) and the Mullerin in der Hie, and her maid (puella medici) was played by “Plasy Paders tochter”. Although members of both families took on several other roles too, it is surely no coincidence that the 1514 merchant scene was played by the Paders and the Balbiers, and highly likely that their performances drew heavily on the medical connections suggested by their family names. Barber-surgeons, whether attached to bathhouses (‘Bader’) or not (‘Barbierer’) were sedentary health practitioners whose commercial practice overlapped considerably with that of the quack troupes who competed directly for their clients. Numerous urban by-laws restrict the activities of itinerant performing quacks. Far from showcasing guest appearances by professional players from visiting troupes, as some have suggested, the merchant scene appears to have represented a welcome opportunity for medical practitioners of a particular community and local citizens close to them to rally against outsiders who commercially threatened them, and to ridicule and undermine the commercial credibility of their itinerant rivals.

30 Michael Pader was cast as both Quartus emiptor and Simeon prophetæ, his son as a peasant, and Jorg Pader as Primus miles Herodis, while Jacob Balbier was also cast as the servants of Simon and Joseph, and his kinsman Sigmund Balbier played Rabbi Samuel and John the Baptist.

31 Raber’s casting supports the suggestion made by LINKE, Unstimmige Opposition (note 8), p. 102, that the increasing secularization of such interludes is marked by a notable change of emphasis, from contrast to the perfection of Christ and Heaven, to ridicule of itinerants.
The text of the 'Raber Passion' follows that of the 1511 Hall Passion closely enough to suggest that this may have provided the model for its unscripted merchant scene.32 The four-strong troupe of the 1511 playtext, the quack Ipocras, his servant Rubein, wife Medica, and her maid Virgo, corresponds to the generically named foursome of the 1514 cast list. As scripted, the 1511 merchant scene is virtually free of scatological or sexual innuendo, portraying the quack couple and their maid and manservant not as an anarchic roving troupe, but as a polite and well-run municipal household. Although for the older scholarship, the simple, unhawnhy nature of this scene points to an early version of the merchant scene, hints of the hard-sell patter and robust comic dialogue that are such a dominating feature of some Easter plays gleam through its speeches. In fact, early German versions of the merchant scene feature especially robust humour, and it is not impossible that the 1511 version was sanitized for publication.33 Although the hugely popular merchant scene is completely absent from the 1514 Bozen Passion cycle, as from most South Tyrolean texts, this does not mean, as some specialists have assumed, that quacks only rarely featured in actual performances of the region. Like the 1511 Hall Passion, Vigil Raber's 1520 Ludos Pascalis features a fully scripted merchant scene.34 An explanation for the presence of quacks in the 1514 Bozen cast, despite their complete absence from the play text, is offered by the single mention of quacks in yet another South Tyrolean play text. A sentence at the appropriate point in the 1486 text of Lienhard Pfarrkircher's Passion notes, in Latin: "here you may introduce the doctor and his servant, if you wish".35 This is significant for establishing both that merchant scenes did not exclude mystery plays from being staged within churches, and that the absence of quacks from their texts does not rule out their presence on the stage. Evidently, the bawdy merchant scene, hugely popular with audiences but rather less so with the clergy, could be introduced into specific performances of mystery plays as an optional extra, unscripted in the text.

The obvious starting points for tracing the geographic origins and diffusion of merchant scenes and other religious quack scenes are the flawed but magisterial works of KARL YOUNG and WALTHER LIPPHARDT.36 Some five percent of LIPPHARDT's thousand or so Latin and largely Latin Easter texts note unguents or spices being taken to the tomb of Christ by the three Marys. Of these, only thirteen explicitly feature merchant scenes with one onstage mer-

33 Here p. CCXII-CCXXII, p. 331-7 (see, eg, lines 1356-1375, 1397-1412). On the sanitation of textual merchant scenes, see SCHIPKE/PENSEL (note 16), pp. 88-9.
34 ROLOFF/TRAUB/LIPPHARDT (note 29), vol. III, p. 211-218, 313-316.
36 YOUNG (note 14); WALTHER LIPPHARDT: Lateinische Osterfeiern und Oster spiele [+ LOO], 9 vols., Berlin 1975-90.
37 Fifteen texts in LOO specify onstage quacks (one male: LOO nos. 799, 801-4, 804a, 805, 822-3, 825, 827-9; two males: LOO no. 824; or a couple: LOO no. 830).
39 The appendix, below, can only indicate a random few examples for this category, peripheral to the present argument. Obstetricies, or midwives, for example, represent a significant religious comic stock role; see ALLARGOYE NICOLL: Masks, mimes and miracles, studies in the popular theatre, London 1931, p. 184. For other healers in religious plays, see also here p. 186. Midwives feature in eleven of the seventeen French nativity plays analysed by RELOV (note 15), p. 530. He also analyses the roles of twenty-four French Easter plays and seven other biblical plays. Only two of each, respectively those of Origny and Tours, and the Spousus play and Laon Ordo Joseph, include one or more merchants; see here p. 529, 531.
Although YOUNG, unlike LIPPHARDT, does not restrict his collection entirely to Latin Easter texts, gaining any kind of systematic overview of vernacular and non-Easter quack-related texts is surprisingly unstraightforward, especially as much of the vast secondary literature predates significant recently-discovered sources. Whether or not the monastery of St Martial of Limoges is, as has been claimed, 'the true creator of the liturgical drama in France and perhaps in Europe', it seems likely that the religious quack episode was created at St Martial. By 1200, it was spreading from there through France, Spain and further afield. Taken as a whole, its distribution pattern, in Latin and macaronic religious texts, indicates a rapid initial diffusion to Eastern German-speaking Europe during the thirteenth century, complimented by a much slower spread north and southwards, and back into the central German-speaking regions, continuing into the sixteenth century. Quacks became increasingly, though never exclusively, associated with the Visitatio sepulchri, and the merchant scene became more and more important to the Easter play. The mercator juvenis who shares the stage with the three Marys at the tomb of Christ in Verses pascales de III Mfarsi, a text of c. 1100 from Vich in Spain, has been identified as "the earliest example of an extra-biblical addition to the Easter Visitatio play", in "the oldest extant scene in the biblical drama", namely the Visitatio sepulchri. The Vich Easter performance is widely regarded as containing "the original literary kernel of the merchant scene", and despite the numerous religious and secular non-Easter quack episodes known to specialists, for many, it is beyond question that the quack episode originated with the dramatic Easter ceremonies. However, indisputably one of the earliest speaking stage quacks is an oil-seller whose script is recorded not in Latin but in the Romance dialect. He is associated not with the Visitatio sepulchri, but featured in the macaronic Sporsus, a mystery play from Limoges based on the parable of the wise and foolish virgins. Because of the Limoges and Vich plays' similar dating, there is no agreement on which is ear-lier. The Limoges merchants, and the brief vernacular speech in which they unsuccessfully try to sell their oils to the foolish virgins, are without biblical precedent, and this dramatization of the parable of the ten virgins is unique in featuring oil-sellers. The Vich and Limoges merchants are given the earliest of all known quack-related speeches, religious or secular. YOUNG notes the parallels between the Limoges oil-sellers and Easter merchant scene, but dismisses the possibility of the latter's influence for chronological reasons, and concludes that the oil-sellers are an independent creation, inspired directly and solely by the biblical source. Neither does YOUNG raise the possibility of influence in the opposite direction. Instead, he summarizes and broadly supports MEYER's convoluted hypothesis for supposing that the merchant scene was independently created by a French cleric specifically for the Easter performance. MEYER's argument is demolished, but his conclusion accepted, by DE BOOR, whose informed analysis of merchant scenes however makes little or no reference to quack episodes outside the Visitatio sepulchri. This too, represents a significant weak point in WARNING's case for refocusing the search for the religious as opposed to dramatic motivation of the merchant scene from the liturgically-based Visitatio sepulchri, in order to consider its quacks in the light of the 'mythical-archetypal' Harrowing of Hell, and its comic religious stage devils. NICOLL, unusual in considering pan-European religious quacks in general, rather than primarily those in the German Visitatio sepulchri, gives no reason for assuming the precedence of the merchant scene, or for suggesting that it developed not gradually, but as one unique piece of creative writing, by an unidentified twelfth-century poet.

The dramatic function of religious stage quacks

Specialists, who have mainly concentrated on the merchant scene in this as in other aspects of the study of religious stage quacks, long widely favoured the view that their foremost dramatic function was as a vehicle either for realism of a very literal, naive type, or for bawdy comedy. Earlier generations of historians, shocked that merchant scenes could be so heavily larded with a broad humour based squarely on profanities, scatology and sexual misconduct, 47 Matthew 25, v. 1-13. 48 YOUNG (note 14), vol. I, p. 677-82; vol. II, p. 366; Fragmenta Burana. Festschrift zur Feier des Hundertfünfzigjährigen Bestehens der Königlichen Gesellschaft der Wissenschaften zu Göttingen. Abhandlungen der philologisch-historischen Klasse. Ed. by WILHELM MEYER, Berlin 1901, p. 106-15. 49 De BOOR (note 7), p. 346; WARNING (note 3), p. 80-84. 50 NICOLL (note 39), p. 186. 51 HARDIN CRAIG: English religious drama of the middle ages, Oxford 1967, p. 34. CRAIG incorrectly suggests that the role of the religious quack became a speaking part only in the fourteenth century.
and performative aspects of religious plays such as dance, acrobatics and above all music.

While there is no consensus concerning the dramatic function of religious stage quacks, and those outside the Easter context continue to attract little critical attention, a dazzling spectrum of theories attempts to account for the merchant scene’s inclusion in mystery plays. The former frontrunner, that it reflects elements of pre-Christian Germanic pagan folk ritual, although heavily tainted by ideological concerns, still informs suggestions that the merchant scene integrates pagan and Christian aspects of the Easter resurrection festival. In an article first published in 1974, JAKOBSON identifies one episode, of one merchant scene, as the key to their interpretation as burlesque analogues of Christ’s resurrection, namely the mastickár’s restoration to life by the boy Isaac, in the fourteenth century Bohemian ‘Museum fragment’. For him, the quack is the quasi-shaman star of a scene, combining liturgical and folklore elements grounded in the common substratum of ‘pre-Christian rites’. He suggests that they are intended to burlesque and ridicule the liturgy, to promote in spectators the death-defying risus paschalis or ritual laughter traditionally associated with religious celebrations of the triumph of life over death. Defying the central (and insurmountable) dilemma of having to prove a direct, unbroken performative continuity between shamanistic ritual and religious stage quacks, he interprets the merchant scene as saluting Easter “not as a compromise with paganism, but as a Christian tradition in its own right”. This viewpoint has proved extremely influential. Others variously promote the merchant scene as a diverting counterbalance to the religious tension of the plays’ biblical content, as social satire, or as a device for drawing spectators into the dramatic action on a personal level. Yet another perspective identifies the religious quack episode as a quasi-autonomous secular farce, with origins inspired by literature or popular drama. Some scholars view it as a stepping stone towards artistic freedom, a ‘ready made’ play within a play, even as a “comic carcinoma”.

They suggest that it was written and perhaps performed not by the amateurs responsible for mystery plays as a whole, but by mountebanks drawing on their own professional stage repertoires, or by 58 Published with an English translation by VELTRUSKY, A sacred farce (note 5), p. 333-57.

59 Here p. 330.
itinertant theology students (clerici vagantes). The Latin content of many merchant scenes weighs against the authorship of professional quacks, if not students. The castlists of the 1514 Bozen Passion confirm that quack roles, no less than any others, could be assigned to respected members of the local church community. Although variants of this theory still receive sporadic support from some quarters, it is clear that merchant scenes were not acted by genuine performing quacks.

LINKE lucidly explains the theological reasoning behind the comic elements of the Easter quack episode. He plausibly identifies the dramatic function of the merchant scene as the provision of a secular setting, within the biblical story, that serves to heighten the intensity of religious plays' theologically motivated contrast between profane and spiritual concerns, not by glorifying worldly pleasures, but by ridiculing them. Viewed in this perspective, the merchant scene occupies a significant place in the tradition of Narrenliteratur (Folly Literature), in which court or stage fools stand as powerful metaphors for the frailties and temptations of the human condition. Its quacks exemplify human folly by demonstrating concrete examples simultaneously intended as secular entertainment, didactic and religious instruction, and in the medical sense of therapeutic laughter, intended to actively promote healing in its audience. This tradition's multiple intentions are demonstrated with unusual clarity by a medical treatise of 1610, in which the deeply religious South Tyrolean physician Hippolytus Guarinonius frames, within a moralising context, over thirty descriptions of professional stage business performed by marketplace commedia dell'arte-performing quacks. Several concern scatological comic stage business, or lazzi, considerably more explicit than anything offered by the Easter play texts, that evoke the sheer exuberant physicality of quack stage business in a way that no play text can. Thus they provide dramatic exempla offering his readers a literal cure for folly, by warning them against the sins and the vices. Despite concerning the textual use of secular dramatic descriptions in a seventeenth century medical treatise, the passage of 1612 in which Guarinonius explicates this intention affords valuable insights into the reasoning behind the use of bawdy quack humour on the late medieval religious stage. In it, Guarinonius robustly admonishes a reader who challenges the comic episodes and lazzi of his treatise of 1610. Drawing parallels with obscene and scatological behaviour described in didactic passages of the Holy Scriptures, he concludes that every time he, Guarinonius, laughs in his book, any reader misguided enough to criticize this literary strategy should weep at his own folly:

64 LINKE, Zwischen Jammertal und Schlaraffenland (note 8), p. 352, 361-2, 370.

66 Hippolytus Guarinonius: Die Gewel der Verwüstung Menschlichen Geschlechts [...] Ingolstadt 1610.

The religiously-motivated didactic agenda of the robustly 'sex 'n shopping' orientated comic routines of the mixed-gender quack troupe of the religious stage was broadly comparable to that of Guarinonius. In effect, these comic stage quacks were deployed to lure mystery play spectators in as quasi-extras with their sales-pitch. Through them, the churchmen who sponsored and supported these plays aimed to inspire their congregations to recognize and laugh at their own human folly, and to reject it in favour of spiritual redemption. But ultimately, religious quack episodes were so successful and persistent because they worked on many levels. They contrasted the oral rhetoric and physicality of street performers with the literary approach of religious drama, and drew on community, congregational and guild loyalties, and carnivalesque, folkloric, commercial and medical as well as didactic resonances. As pure entertainment, the episode can be enjoyed as a hugely popular quasi-secular attraction that widens the base of spectators for religious plays. It does this by evoking the atmosphere of the earliest, most longstanding and most successful form of commercial promotion, namely the harangues and theatrical shows offered by marketplace quacks. To a certain extent these are parodied in literary forms such as Rutebeuf's mid thirteenth century quack monologues. But self-parody was in any case a traditional component of all but the least sophisticated quack harangues. Marketplace quacks understood that laughter promotes economic success, by engaging audience attention and encouraging relaxed spending, and they pitched their performances accordingly. As parody, religious quacks worked not by inverting genuine quack rhetoric, but by heightening it. Nor did they rely on wholesale borrowings from ‘secular’ literary quack parodies, transplanted into religious plays with minimal regard for liturgical issues. Genuine medieval quacks created their wide spectrum of performative comic business and monologues within a thriving interdependent literary tradition, that produced texts geared to the didactic and economic agendas of the religious and secular stage, as well as to the robust orality of marketplace rhetoric.

Conclusions

The confinement of religious stage quacks to the merchant scene, and the standardization of its familiar cast and comic business within the Visitatio sepulchri, was never complete. Rather than as one unique response to the specific liturgical situation of the three Marys at the tomb of Christ, the religious quack episode has a self-contained, improvisational nature reminiscent of the professional stage. It shares this and other characteristics of the transferable popular secular comic stage business or lazzi that are the stock in trade of the commedia dell’arte. However disparate their liturgical contexts, the possibility that the earliest religious quack episodes, and notably those from Vich and Limoges, were independent literary creations, seems remote enough to be completely beyond coincidence. Questions concerning the precise dating or linguistic analysis of the surviving manuscripts are obscured by the fact that many are based, to whatever extent, on significantly earlier texts or performance practice. Although issues of precedence surrounding early stage quacks remain unresolved, it is clear that their development on the medieval religious stage is crucial to an understanding of their impact on literature and drama. Religious stage quacks mark a significant early milestone in the development of the quack harangue and the quack quarrel as literary conventions, and cast long shadows over the figure of the quack in early modern literature. Additionally, they may be viewed as foreshadowing several significant strategies of the professional comic stage. Their three central stock characters, the quack, his wife and their servant, may be compared to the commedia dell’arte stage master-servant-inamorato trio. Their popular comic set-pieces share the characteristic potential of lazzi for improvisation, transferal from one play or dramatic situation to another, and extension or curtailment according to the requirements of individual audiences or sponsors. The comic stage business and stock roles of religious quack episodes deserve recognition as a significant potential source for certain of the most characteristic and popular dramatic strategies and roles of the early professional stage.

Appendix: Chronological overview of some medieval religious stage quacks

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>DATE</th>
<th>NAME / TYPE</th>
<th>DOCUMENT / LANGUAGE / REFERENCE</th>
<th>QUACKS</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>11th-12th cent</td>
<td>Le Sponsus (Mystère des Verges noyes et des Vierges folles)</td>
<td>Text (30 of 105 verses) [Latin &amp; Romance: YOUNG (note 14), II, p. 362-4]</td>
<td>5x foolish virgins 2M or couples or more than 2 [Mercatores-merchaena]</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>c. 1100</td>
<td>Ludus paschali</td>
<td>Text [Latin: LOO (note 14) no. 823]</td>
<td>3x Marys 1M [mercator iuvensis]</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>13th cent</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>c. 1200</td>
<td>Incipit Ordo paschalis Klosterneuburger OS, nr Wien</td>
<td>Text [Latin: LOO 829]</td>
<td>3x Marys 1M [Specianarius]</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>c. 1230</td>
<td>Benediktbeurer PS (Carmina Burana) Seekau, nr Knittelfeld, Austria</td>
<td>Text [Latin &amp; German: HARTL, p. 12-23]</td>
<td>M. Magd in house of Simon the Pharisee buys cosmetics / repents / returns to buy unguents Couple [mercator-vendor-chramer-mercator iuvensis / uxor suae]</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>c. 1230</td>
<td>[‘Großes’] Benediktbeurer OS (Carmina Burana) Seekau, nr Knittelfeld</td>
<td>Text [Latin &amp; German: LOO 830]</td>
<td>3x Marys Couple [Apothecarius-mercator iuvensis / Uxor apothecauri]</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Mid 13th cent</td>
<td>Ludus paschali</td>
<td>Text (54 of 315 verses) [Latin: LOO 824]</td>
<td>3x Marys 2M [mercator-mercator iuvensis / alius mercator-Domine]</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>13th cent</td>
<td>Berthold of Regensburg (d.1272)</td>
<td>Sermon</td>
<td>3x Marys identifies servants of merchant scene as devils [Pusterbalk / Lasterbalk]</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

---

69 My thanks to Matthew Peacock for advising on the Latin.
70 EDUARD HARTL: Das Benediktbeurer Passionsspiel, das St. Galler Passionsspiel, nach den Handschriften herausgegeben, Halle/Saale 1952.
<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>DATE</th>
<th>NAME / TYPE</th>
<th>DOCUMENT /LANGUAGE /REFERENCE</th>
<th>QUACKS</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>Late 13th or 14th cent</td>
<td>Gerona, Barcelona</td>
<td>[Latin: LOO 822]</td>
<td>3x Marys 1M [Mercator]</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>14th cent</td>
<td>C. 1300 Prague, St George Convent</td>
<td>[Latin: LOO 799]</td>
<td>3x Marys rubrics imply singing part 1M [Unguentarius]</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>14th cent</td>
<td>Early 14th cent</td>
<td>Prague, St George Convent</td>
<td>[Latin: LOO 801]</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>14th cent</td>
<td>Early 14th cent</td>
<td>Prague, St George Convent</td>
<td>[Latin: LOO 802]</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>14th cent</td>
<td>Early 14th cent</td>
<td>Prague, St George Convent</td>
<td>[Latin: LOO 803]</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>14th cent</td>
<td>Early 14th cent</td>
<td>Prague, St George Convent</td>
<td>[Latin: LOO 804]</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>14th cent</td>
<td>Early 14th cent</td>
<td>Prague, St George Convent</td>
<td>[Latin: LOO 805]</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>14th cent</td>
<td>Early 14th cent</td>
<td>Prague, St George Convent</td>
<td>v7 [Latin: LOO 805]</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>14th cent</td>
<td>Early 14th cent</td>
<td>Wiener PS-Fragment</td>
<td>[Latin &amp; German: FRONING, 74, p. 315]</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>14th cent</td>
<td>Early 14th cent</td>
<td>La Passion du Palatinus Paris</td>
<td>v1864-1942 [French: FRANK/ RIBARD, p. 231-5]</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1315-17</td>
<td>Ludus paschalis</td>
<td>Origny, St Benoîte Convent, nr St Quentin</td>
<td>[Latin &amp; French: LOO 825]</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>DATE</th>
<th>NAME / TYPE</th>
<th>DOCUMENT /LANGUAGE /REFERENCE</th>
<th>QUACKS</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>1st half of 14th cent</td>
<td>Frankfurter OS-Fragment</td>
<td>[Latin &amp; German: JANOTA, 75, p. 422-4]</td>
<td>3x Marys 1M [kaufman-mercator-mercator primus]</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>14th cent</td>
<td>C. 1340 Quarante Miracles de la Vierge</td>
<td>[French: MIR]</td>
<td>1 Miracle of the Virgin: midwife in birth scene [sage femme]</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>
|            | C. 1350 Baldemar von Peterweil Frankfurter Dirigerlocule | [Latin & German: JANOTA (NOTE 72), I, p. 27, II, p. 849-57] | 3x Marys 2 couples [mercator-lunger man-merca-
|            |             | [French: PROMPTER’S TEXT, v. 260-95] | tor iuvenis-juenger loufman-meyer-
|            |             | [Italian: DELBONO, p. 61-2, 74-7] | tory-echter-scher woman / xcor / xcor aterias medici |

77 MARIUS SEPERT: Origines catholiques du théâtre moderne, Paris 1899.
78 CAMILLE CHABANEIX: Sainte Marie Madeleine dans la littérature provençale, recueil des textes provençaux, Paris 1887.
<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>DATE</th>
<th>NAME / TYPE</th>
<th>DOCUMENT / LANGUAGE / REFERENCE</th>
<th>QUACKS</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>14th cent</td>
<td>Berlin-thüringisches OS-Fragment</td>
<td>Text, 160v; [Latin &amp; German: [SEELMANN, 80, 1926]</td>
<td>3x Marys Couple &amp; 2nd M &amp; old female client [Mercator-here myester mini-arzt-eyme kunstiggen man / Rubin-lieber knecht min-junger jungelino-lieber jungelinseliger knappe iuung / min vroere vor Avarthouna / eyme alden wibe]</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Mid 14th cent</td>
<td>Mastický</td>
<td>Text, 431 lines [Latin &amp; Bohemian: VELTRUSKY: A sacred farce (note 5), p. 332]</td>
<td>3x Marys Couple &amp; 2M &amp; 2x clients [mercator-Yporcas-nistrie Severine-mercator iuvenis / Rubinus-Rubin z Benátek (i.e. of Venice) / Pustpalk / usur mercatorts / Abraham &amp; son Isaac]</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>2nd half of 14th cent</td>
<td>Bohemian of 14th cent Mastický</td>
<td>Text, 298 lines [Latin &amp; Bohemian: VELTRUSKY: A sacred farce (note 5), p. 365]</td>
<td>3x Marys 3M &amp; 2x clients [medicus / Rubeynus / Pustpalk / unnamed Jew &amp; son]</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>DATE</th>
<th>NAME / TYPE</th>
<th>DOCUMENT / LANGUAGE / REFERENCE</th>
<th>QUACKS</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>1st half of 15th cent</td>
<td>Erlauer OS</td>
<td>Text, 1325 Wolfenbütteler OS</td>
<td>3x Marys 2M [mercator-mercator iuvenisgude man-cramer-Meister / Robin-leve jen-gelin]</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1st half of 15th cent</td>
<td>Melker (rheinfränkisch-hessisches) OS-Fragment</td>
<td>Text, 1440 La Passion Nostre Seigneur</td>
<td>3x Marys 1M [l'espier-Sire]</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

81 JULIE-MARIE RICHARD: Le mystère de la Passion, Paris 1891.
DATE  NAME / TYPE                  DOCUMENT /LANGUAGE /REFERENCE   QUACKS

c. 1440  Résurrection Abbey Sainte-Geneviève, Paris
         Text  [French: MATHIEU
                    (note 12), p. 68-9]   3x Marys
         1M [d’espírre-Maistre-Sire]

1452  Arnoul Gréban Le Mystère de la Passion Anger
                    380-2, 390-2]   2 ‘quack’ scenes:
         1. A female cloth-merchant sells Joseph and Nicodemus Jesus’ grave-cloth
             1F [marketplace]
         2. 3x Marys
             1M [espier]

15th cent  San Tommaso Italy
         Text  [Italian: D’ANCONA, p.
                    582-4]   Physicians at a court deathbed
         3M [Primo medico-Maestro Anton di balorda / altro medico-Maestro
             Guido di caccagna / Arrighetto-serva]

2nd half of 15th cent  La rappresentazione della Conversione di Santa Maria Maddala
tena Italy
         Text  [Italian: BANFI, p.
         3M [Primo medico-maestro Antonio /
             meser Matteo-secondo medico / maestro
             Dino]

2nd half of 15th cent  La rappresentazione dell’ortolano Clemensini
tena Italy
         Text  [Italian & Italian: BANFI
                    (note 83), p. 511-36: 527-33]   L’ortolano
         3M [primo medico-medico / secondo medico / terzo medico-reverend magister]

2nd half of 15th cent  La rappresentazione del re superbo Italy
         Text  [Italian: BANFI (note
         2M [primo medico-maestro / secondo
             medico-maestro]

2nd half of 15th cent  Vno miracolol o la nostra Donna: cioe lara presentazione di stella
tena Italy
         Text  [Italian: BANFI (note
         2M [primo medico-degni mastri / secondo
             medico-maestro]

2nd half  Wiener Rubinarolle of 15th cent
         Single role text, 212v
         [Italian & German: SCHRÖDER
         & MENCÍK, p. 69]   Unspecified [3x Marys]
         3M & 1F [Herr-mayster Ypochraz-
         Medicus / Rubinus-Rubin-Pschau-
         Eckhart / Greten / Marcil-knecht]

2nd half of 15th cent  Lübener OS-Fragment
         Text  [German: see SEEL- MANN
                    (note 78), p. 259-61]   3x Marys
         3M & 1F [medicus / Rubin / Pusterbalg / mercatix]

1460  Gabriel Briel Berliner (theinisches)
         OS, Mainz
         Text, 2285vv:
         v. 531-690, 937-1006
         1990-2047
         [Latin & German: RUEFF, p.
         164-6, 197-9]   3 quack scenes:
         1. Comic prelude to 3xMarys
             2M [medicus / Smackfol]
         2. 3x Marys (resumed after interpolated scene)
             2M [Medicus-Meister / servus
             medicus-Smackfol-lieber knecht]
         3. Wedding interludi in concluding doubling Thomas episode
             2M & 1F [Medicus-Meister Gomprecht-Meister / Smackfol-lieber knecht / dichter]

1461  The Blysed Sacrament
         Croxton, England
         Text, vv. 525-652
         [English: DAVIS]   Miracle of the consecrated wafer
         3M & 1x client [mercator-St Aris-toitus / Master Brondyche of Brabantfamous phsygyn-the leche / Colle-hys man / Jonathas]

1472  Wiener (schellisches)
         OS
         Text  [Latin & German:
                    BLOSEN, p. 66-89]   3x Marys
         Couple & 2nd M [institutior-vendor-crammer-Kauffman-meister-medicusartict-mercator-krome / Rubin-knecht-servus-kint-jungeling / my schones weip anthonie-mercurius-ercitizen]

1486  Lienhard Pfarrkirchens
         P (Sterzing P)
         Sterzing, Tyrol
         Optional improvisation, directly after 3x
         3100
         [Latin & German:
         ROLLOF/TRAUB/ LIPPHARDT (note
         2M [primo medico-degni mastri / secondo
         medico-maestro]

1486  Jehan Michel (based on Arnoul Gréban, 1452)
         Le Mystère de la Passion
         Anger
         Text, 29924vv:
         vv. 29175-29302
         428-30]   Nicodemus buys spices offstage while montage the widowed cloth-merchant Julye (who also appears in several other scenes) sells Joseph Jesus’ grave-cloth
         1F [Julye, veufve, mere de l’adolescent-marchande des suaires]

1491  Egmund nr Utrecht,
         St Adalbert
         Text  [Latin: LOO 827]   3x Marys
         1M [mercator juvenis-speciernarius]

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>DATE</th>
<th>NAME / TYPE</th>
<th>DOCUMENT /LANGUAGE /REFERENCE</th>
<th>QUACKS</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>c. 1495</td>
<td>Johan Michel: Mystère de la Résurrection de Notre Seigneur Jésus-Christ</td>
<td>Text [French: ABRAHAMS (note 10); p. 116; MATHEU (note 12), p. 66-7]</td>
<td>3x Marys &amp; Johanna (Herod’s wife) 1M [apoticaire-espicier]</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>c. 1495</td>
<td>Antonia Pulci (1452-1501) La rappresentazione di Santa Guglielma</td>
<td>Text [Italian: BANTI (note 83), p. 537-81; 569-75]</td>
<td>Santa Guglielma cures a leper 2M [uno medico / uno altro medico]</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>16th cent</td>
<td>Egerer Fronleichnamsspiel (Eger, Hungary, formerly Erlau)</td>
<td>Text, vv. 7864-7901 [Latin &amp; German: MILCHSACK91]</td>
<td>3x Marys 2M [mercator / Rubins]</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1501</td>
<td>Alsfelder PS with additions to 1517</td>
<td>A. Text, v. 7483-7631; incl. additions for 1517 production by ‘Schreiber C’; Hülscher’s 5 extra speeches for medics, see below, 1517 [Latin &amp; German: JANOTA (note 72), II, p. 96, 98, 100, 201, 841-7, 905]</td>
<td>3x Marys Couple &amp; 2nd M [medicinam magistri magister Ypocras-meiister Ypocras-medicus-magister Ypocras-lunger man-kouffmann-mercator-mercator iuuenis-jouffmann-mercator-mercator Ypocras-meiister-ferro-kouffmann / seruis medici Rubinus-serius-knecht / Vir mercurialis-vxor]</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1504</td>
<td>St Merisiek Cornwall, England</td>
<td>Text, vv. 1378-1485 [Cornish: CHAMBERS (note 9), p. 169, 186 ed. Whitley Stokes, II</td>
<td>Emperor Constantine, a leper, buys a remedy from a doctor and his clerk 2M</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

91 GUSTAV MILCHSACK: Egerer Fronleichnamsspiel, Tübingen 1881.
<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>DATE</th>
<th>NAME / TYPE</th>
<th>DOCUMENT / LANGUAGE / REFERENCE</th>
<th>QUACKS</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>c. 1580</td>
<td>Mikołaj de Wilko-wiecko</td>
<td>Text [UDALSKA,95 p. 177]</td>
<td>3x Marys 1M [Raben]</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1583</td>
<td>Renward Cysat</td>
<td>[German: EVANS (note 92), p. 144, 166, 219]</td>
<td>3x Marys 1M [Appenteger]</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>(apothecary and 'Stadt-schreiber')</td>
<td>Director's notes</td>
<td>Apotheker</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>Luzerner PS</td>
<td>Plan (Day 1)</td>
<td>Apotheker / knaben</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td>Notes (Day 1)</td>
<td>Serenus / Apotheker</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td>Cast (Day 1)</td>
<td>Die Apotheke</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td>Plan (Day 2)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td>B Plan</td>
<td>1M [Appenteecker]</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td>C Verz. der Bühnen-orte (3 lists, for intro, Days 1 &amp; 2)</td>
<td>Day 2: 3x Marys 1M [Appenteecker-Krämer]</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>Villinger PS</td>
<td>B No quacks / apothecary (wrong day or place?)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td>C 3. Die apprentice-6. die appenteeck-15. der appentecker</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

---

97 EDUARD HARTL: Das Drama des Mittelalters. Passionsspiele II (Das Donaueschinger Passions-spiel), Darmstadt 1966.

---

JODY ENDERS

The Devil in the Flesh of Theater

Der merkwürdige, apokryphe Fall von Bar-le-Duc (1485), in dem ein Schauspieler noch im Teufelskostüm seine Ehefrau vergewaltigt, vereint, was nie hätte geübert werden dürfen: Ethik als Corpus des Wissens und das Körperwissen des Theaters. Der Fall erinnert uns daran, dass Theater besser (wenng auch manchmal moralisch schlechter) als jedes andere literarische Medium dazu geeignet ist, Akteure dazu zu bringen, Gedanken in die Tat umzusetzen. Da die Geschichte außerdem mit einer moralistischen Pointe aufwurtet, mit der kaum eine moderne lehrhafte Erzählung konkurrieren kann – einem missgebildeten und monströsen Kind als Erzeugnis dieser Vergewaltigung – inkarniert sie im Wortsinn ihre zentrale Aussage, dass im Theater Intentionen verkörpert werden. Indem die Anekdote von Bar-le-Duc den Prozess der Realisierung von Theater mit der Genese des Verbrechens zusammenführt, erzählt sie von einem theatralen Herzen der Finsternis, das wir die Angst vor dem unmittelbar Drohenden, dem Imminennten nennen könnten. Diese ist für die Virtualität des Theaters ebenso relevant wie für jene der Ethik.

How dangerous was religious theater? Not just as words but as action? Not just as drama on the page but as acts on the stage? If we believe several chroniclers of Metz, something happened in 1485 that offered, quite literally, living proof that medieval theatrical life was very dangerous indeed, albeit not necessarily in the ways that one might expect.

According to the exceptionally loquacious Philippe de Vigneulles, it all happened one fine day when a certain actor, whose name is unknown, returned home after his performance in the city of Bar-le-Duc (about 250 kilometers east of Paris). We happen to know that a play was performed at all for one reason only: the terrible thing that happened afterward. One of the actors, still wearing his devil-suit, apparently proceeded to force himself on his wife:

Or avint que, en ce meisme tamps, fut juez ung jeux à Bar le Duc, auquelle estoient aultuns hommes pourtant le personnainge de dyablez. Et, entre eux, en y olt ungque en son habit voulut avoir la compagnie de sa femme. Et elle le diroit, et demandoit qu'il volloit faire; et il luy respondit: 'Je veut', dit il, 'faire le dyable'. Et, quoy que sa femme se sceut defandre, force luy fut de obey.1

---

1 La Chronique de Philippe de Vigneulles. Ed. by CHARLES BRUNEAU, 4 vols., Metz 1927-33 (vol. 3), pp. 114-115. Hereafter CPV. Compare with the version that appears in Les Chroniques de la Ville de Metz, recueillies, mises en ordre et publiées pour la première fois. Le Doyen de St. Thibault. – Jean Aubrion. – Philippe de Vigneulles. – Prailmon. – Annales Mea-