Text and performance: medieval religious stage quacks and the commedia dell’arte

How to cite:

For guidance on citations see FAQs.

© [not recorded]
Version: Version of Record

Link(s) to article on publisher’s website:

Copyright and Moral Rights for the articles on this site are retained by the individual authors and/or other copyright owners. For more information on Open Research Online’s data policy on reuse of materials please consult the policies page.
Trends in Medieval Philology

Edited by
Ingrid Kasten · Niklaus Largier · Mireille Schnyder

Editorial Board
Ingrid Bennewitz · John Greenfield · Christian Kiening · Theo Kobusch · Peter von Moos · Uta Störmer-Caysa

Volume 11

Walter de Gruyter · Berlin · New York

Transformationen des Religiösen

Performativität und Textualität im geistlichen Spiel

Herausgegeben von
Ingrid Kasten und Erika Fischer-Lichte

Redaktionelle Mitarbeit
Elke Koch

Walter de Gruyter · Berlin · New York
Inhaltsverzeichnis

INGRID KASTEN
Transformationen des Religiösen. Performativität und Textualität im geistlichen Spiel .......................................................... VII

I. Das geistliche Spiel als cultural performance

ERIKA FISCHER-LICHTE
Theater und Fest – Anmerkungen zum Verhältnis von Theatralität und Ritualität in den geistlichen Spielen des Mittelalters ................. 3

ECKEHARD SIMON
Geistliche Fastnachts spiele. Zum Grenzbereich zwischen geistlichem und weltlichem Spiel ...................................................... 18

JUTTA EMING
Simultaneität und Verdoppelung. Motivationsstrukturen im geistlichen Spiel .............................................................. 46

GLENN EHRSTINE
Präsenzverwaltung: Die Regulierung des Spielrahmens durch den Proklamator und andere expositores ludi ....................... 63

WERNER RÖCKE
Maria Magdalena und Judas Ischarioth. Das Alsfelder Passionsspiel und die Erlauer Spiele als Experimentierfelder des Bösen und soziokulturell Standards im Spätmittelalter .......................... 80

II. Performativität und Textualität

M. A. KATRITZKY
Text and Performance: Medieval Religious Stage Quacks and the Commedia dell’Arte ......................................................... 99

JODY ENDERS
The Devil in the Flesh of Theater ......................................................... 127

CHRISTIAN KIENING
Präsenz – Memoria – Performativität. Überlegungen im Blick auf das Innsbrucker Fronleichnamsspiel .................................. 139
CORNELIA HERBERICH
Lektüren des Performativen. Zur Medialität geistlicher Spiele des Mittelalters ................................................................. 169

III. Transformationen des Religiösen –
Inszenierungen des Heiligen

ANDREAS KOTTE
Vom Verstummen der Texte angesichts des Wunders.
Wirkungsstrategien im geistlichen Spiel ................................................. 189

ELKE KOCH
Inszenierungen des Heiligen. Spielspezifische Strategien am Beispiel hessischer Passionsspiele ................................................. 201

KLAS KRÜGER
Bild und Bühne. Dispositive des imaginären Blicks ................................. 218

Clemens Risi
Erfahrung des Heiligen in der Oper? Zur religiösen Dimension der Affektdarstellung und -übertragung im Musiktheater des frühen 17. Jahrhunderts ........................................................................... 249

JENS ROSELT
Transformationen des Religiösen im zeitgenössischen Theater .................. 264

Register ........................................................................................................... 280

Namen, Orte, Werke ..................................................................................... 280

Sachen ............................................................................................................ 284

INGRID KASTEN
Transformationen des Religiösen
Performativität und Textualität im geistlichen Spiel

Die Beiträge des vorliegenden Sammelbandes sind aus einer internationalen und interdisziplinären Tagung hervorgegangen, die im Rahmen des Sonderfor-schungsbereichs „Kulturen des Performativen“ vom 23.-25. September 2005 an der Freien Universität Berlin veranstaltet wurde. Mit dem Performativen als zentralem Paradigma hat sich der Sonderforschungsbereich das Ziel gesetzt, Kultur nicht mehr nach dem „Text-Modell“ zu definieren, sondern als Inszenierung und Aufführung zu begreifen. Dabei wird zwischen dem „Text-Modell“ und dem „Performance-Modell“ jedoch kein Ausschlussverhältnis postuliert, sondern es wird davon ausgegangen, dass beide Modelle aufeinder zu beziehen und in ihren historisch je variablen Relationen zu untersuchen sind. Die Schwerpunktsetzung der Tagung auf die geistigen Spiele des Mit-telalters ergab sich aus der Zusammenarbeit des theaterwissenschaftlichen und des mediävistischen Teilprojekts des Sonderforschungsbereichs.

Die Relationen von Text und Kultur, von Orality und Skripturalität, unterscheiden sich in der Kultur des Mittelalters beträchtlich von den Verhältnissen in der Moderne. Mit dem Konzept des Performativen können auf systemati-cher Ebene verschiedene Dimensionen erschlossen werden – eine sprachwissen-schaftliche bzw. sprachphilosophische Dimension, eine Dimension der cultural performance und eine ästhetische Dimension –, die geeignet sind, den Blick nicht nur für systematische Aspekte, sondern auch für historische Differenzen und Transformationsprozesse zu schärfen. Die geistigen Spiele, die in vielen europäischen Kulturen des Mittelalters bis in die Moderne nachweisbar sind, sehen in engem Zusammenhang mit Frömmigkeitspraktiken der Zeit und beziehen ihre Sujets aus dem Kult, aus der Bibel und aus Legenden. Die Stoffe bleiben auch später in der religiösen Praxis, in der bildenden Kunst, im Theater, in der Literatur und schließlich im Film produktiv. Von Anfang an war deshalb geplant, trotz der Schwerpunktsetzung auf das geistliche Spiel die
Perspektive exemplarisch auf die Gegenwart hin offen zu halten.1

Die Tagung konnte an die seit einiger Zeit deutlich belebte Diskussion über die Spezifik theatricaler Formen in Mittelalter und früher Neuzeit anknüpfen.

1 Das Konzept wurde in Zusammenarbeit von Ingrid Kasten, Erika Fischer-Lichte, Jutta Eming und Elke Koch entwickelt.
M. A. KATRITZKY

Text and Performance
Medieval Religious Stage Quacks and the Commedia dell’Arte

Introduction

Quacks were the least respectable and respected medieval healers. Themselves significant promoters of professional stage spectacle, they are the earliest and most prominent non-biblical characters in religious drama, where they make an increasing contribution from the twelfth century onwards (see Appendix). Situated on a broad continuum seamlessly bridging the gaping chasm between the solidly respectable municipal merchant or medical practitioner and reviled, rootless charlatans and mountebanks, quacks combined, in widely varying proportions, three elements: the medical, the itinerant, and the theatrical. They sold herbs, drugs, patent miracle-cures with closely guarded secret recipes, and cosmetics. Some also prescribed and administered medication and treatment to patients, either for a variety of ailments or as specialists. They were itinerant, in that they went to their customers, rather than waiting for customers to come to them. Some travelled continuously across the length and breadth of Europe, from one annual fair to another, some within their own country or region, others only intermittently, or hardly at all. Above all, quacks were performers. They used theatricality, in its widest possible sense, to attract customers and to promote and advertise their pharmaceuticals and health care services. Contextualized within the deceitful economy of the marketplace, religious stage quacks provide a profane secular counterpart to the healing Christ of the Gospel miracles. As grotesques and gargoyles proliferated in late medieval Northern church decoration, so comic episodes caricaturizing the medical inadequacies, cupidity and crude humour of quacks came to dominate its religious drama. Typically, they feature during the Visitatio sepulchri, or visit of the three Marys to the tomb of Christ. Here, in an episode known as the merchant scene, an itinerant pedlar, variously characterized as a masticār, medicus, mercator or unguentarius, with or without a wife and troupe, sometimes sells the Marys herbs and spices before they go to embalm Christ’s body, and discover the empty tomb.

Religious quack episodes occur most frequently in connection with the three Marys’ need for unguents at the tomb of Christ, and they are often considered primarily in terms of a response to this single liturgical requirement. The present investigation seeks to develop a pan-European holistic approach recognizing that by no means all religious stage quacks are confined to the merchant scene, and accommodating their varied narrative contexts. The fluid boundaries and synergies between the medieval religious stage and secular performance practice are perhaps nowhere more apparent than with respect to dramatic quack episodes. The present article overviews religious quacks as a whole, with a view to highlighting their resonances with the early modern professional stage (see Appendix). Specialists have sought the origins of the commedia dell’arte in a wide range of contexts, not least in classical drama, but never in any systematic way in the quack episodes of the religious stage. To a certain extent, these may even be viewed as precursors of the characteristic stage business, or lazzi, of the professional stage. The comic hallmark of the commedia dell’arte performances of Italian secular professional players, lazzi were self-contained expandable units of improvised stage business. Featuring stock characters, they were designed to be expanded or contracted in response to specific audiences, and to be transferrable from one play to another with minimal modification. Many centuries before their adoption by professional performing troupes, religious quack episodes pioneered stock roles with predictable verbal, visual and physical comic routines, and the clear potential for improvisation. Although such dramatic strategies foreshadow the professional stage in several significant ways, only one has received widespread recognition. This concerns the stock quack assistant Rubin, often identified as a forerunner of the stock stage fools of the itinerant professionals, such as the English troupes’ Picklehering or Jean Potage, or the Harlequin or Zanni of the Italian commedia dell’arte. These stage fools made a major impact as the servant character who joins his master and a young female as one of the three stock roles whose stars rose in the sixteenth century, just as the power of church drama was fading. They dominated professional Italian drama throughout the early modern period as the central commedia dell’arte trio of master, servant and inamorata. One of the most important comic configurations of professional drama, this trio was heralded by the three main stock roles of the merchant scene. These are not “the eternal triangle of the doctor, Rubin and Pusterpalk”, 2 but a far more significant, widespread and rarely identified group, the mixed-gender threesome of the quack couple and their chief assistant. 3

The merchant scene

The Gospel of John relates that, directly following the Crucifixion, Joseph of Arimathea and Nicodemus wound the body of Christ in linen and spices on that same evening, using a hundred pounds of myrrh and aloes provided by Nicodemus. Matthew does not mention spices at all. Luke relates that the Holy women prepared the spices on the Sabbath but observed the traditional day of rest, waiting until early on Sunday morning to take them to the tomb. Only Mark indicates that the spices for embalming Christ’s body were not purchased until after Good Friday and the Sabbath: “when the Sabbath was past, Mary Magdalene, and Mary the mother of James, and Salome, had bought sweet spices, that they might come and anoint him”. 4 Notwithstanding such tenuous New Testament indications, onstage speaking quacks had already established themselves on the religious stage by the eleventh century. They were pioneered in Latin and macaronic mystery plays preserved in texts dating from around 1100 onwards, some of which specify a merchant or spice merchant, and became extremely popular, sometimes dominant non-biblical characters in the Visitatio sepulchri, the pivotal scene of medieval Easter observances and Passion performances. Widely regarded as crucial to the emergence of religious theatre from church ceremony, the Visitatio sepulchri and the quacks of its so-called merchant scene have attracted considerable scholarly attention.5

---

By the fourteenth century, standardization of the merchant scene and its stock cast and comic business was setting in. French, Bohemian and especially German Easter plays increasingly supplemented the lone spice merchant with members of an itinerant troupe. Indisputably, the vast majority of genuine quack troupes were led by men. However, it was profitable to provide, in parallel to the quack’s often very public marketplace practice, a more discrete private consultation facility for female patients.6 Numerous early modern documents refer to male healers who shared their medical practise with a female healer capable of providing such a service, generally their wife. A similar pattern had already marked the activities of some quack troupes of the religious stage.7 Here, as the vernacular increasingly replaced Latin, merchant scenes gradually expanded to dominate a whole section, often featuring a troupe led by a married couple, each actively contributing to the commercial success of the business, and aided by one or more servants. Although religious stage quacks drew on vernacular literature, as well as directly on the orality, performativity and crude humour of the genuine quacks, attempts to prove their precedence in secular plays founder on chronological issues. The unreliable, fragmentary pre-eighteenth-century evidence concerning English ‘hero combat’ mummers’ plays, and numerous surviving texts of ‘Arztspiele’ or secular German carnival farces featuring the doctor and his attendant, all postdate the earliest merchant scenes.8 If the exact connections between the Eng-

5 JAROSŁAW F. VATRUSKI summarizes the most significant French and German merchant scenes in A sacred farce from medieval Bohemia: Mastichtá, Ann Arbor 1985, p. 78-117. See also appendix, below.
7 The family-based quack troupe explicitly specified by the texts of some religious quack episodes, including the Sponsus, and featured in certain others whose texts include only a single speaking quack (for example the 1583 Lucerne play), reflects traditional economic practice in the itinerant healthcare industry. As such, its constituent members are neither, as suggested by some specialists, primarily dictated by religious imperative (HELMUT DE BOOR: Die Textgeschichte der lateinischen Osterfeiern, Tübingen 1967, p. 359) nor by ecolitic pagan precedent. Warning (note 3), p. 85, elegantly turns this last theory on its head, suggesting that religious stage quacks provided a foothold for pagan elements to enter Christian drama. ischner Verein XXVIII-XXX), nos. 6, 48, 54, 57, 82, 85, 98, 101, 114, 120; CARL HAMMER: The latimus, others, more open to non-textual factors, already detect a comic dimension to that of the thirteenth century Tours text. It seems highly probable that well before being explicitly recorded in scripts, at least some religious productions visually exploited the comic possibilities of the quack through costume or gesture. The verbal comic possibilities are richly reflected in many later scripts. Where they are not, as in the merchant scenes of the fifteenth-century Wolfenbüttel and sixteenth-century Hall and Lucerne cycles, this may as often be a prudent response to censorship in the written version, as an accurate reflection of an absence of any comic dimension in the actual performances. In the earlier, largely Latin productions, even performing in the vernacular gave quacks, from those of the eleventh-century Sponsus onwards, hugely comic resonances for an audience used to hearing physicians mock itinerant healers for their lack of Latin.

In the merchant scene's most fully developed versions, the lone quack was replaced with a couple-led troupe, and his essentially brief selling routine to the three Marys was padded out with bawdy comic interchanges of total biblical irrelevance. In a lengthy comic scene of a largely secular nature, the troupe typically prepare and market their products. They puff their skills, barter and banter with the Holy women, crack jokes of a surprisingly robust nature, and conclude by packing up to continue their travels, often going their separate ways after a quarrel between the quack couple. In the fourteenth-century Brandenburg quack troupe, the familiar wife and second servant supplementing the stock roles Meister Ypcras and his servant Pusterback bear the non-standard names Baptonia and Surgan, and the troupe starts with a comic drinking routine not found elsewhere. Later plays, such as those of Innsbruck (1391), Vienna (1472), Alsfeld and Erlau (fifteenth century) and Bozen (1514) increasingly standardize both the names and comic stage business of their quacks (see Appendix). The merchant scene of the Erlau Easter play, thought to originate from early fifteenth-century Kärnten in Austria, takes up the first 940 of the 1331 verses of the play's third scene. A stage direction at its very beginning, instructing the quacks' senior assistant to announce the merchant scene in prologue form, underlines its optional and improvisational nature. The Erlau merchant scene is particularly informative concerning the troupe's medical products, and the division of labour between the quack couple, Medicus and Medica. Offstage, the couple has young children and a maid, Gredlein. Onstage, they have two male assistants, a senior one called Rubinus and a junior called Pusterpalkch. Medicus introduces himself at the beginning of the merchant scene as a skilled master of noble birth from Asia, lately come from Paris. He claims to have brought the troupe's medicines from Milan, Flanders and Arabia, and ends the merchant scene by leaving the stage with Pusterpalkch, to "return to Arabia." When the Erlau play's Medicus gives Rubinus the task of publicising his medical products and services, he starts by describing the troupe's self-manufactured pharmaceuticals and cosmetics. Assuring the crowd that they were brought by his master from distant lands, he offers them eight individually described unguents. Two are purely medical, respectively for healing wounds and physical disabilities, one is an ointment aimed at men with slothful or nagging wives, another at women with physically abusive men, and a fifth restores women's virginity. Three others are cosmetic, namely a face rouge and hair bleach for women, and a hair restorative for men. Rubinus' eulogy includes many of the standbys familiar from quack monologues, handbills and pictures. Tooth extraction, lithotomies and the administration of enemas are all alluded to in a speech which is an early and lengthy example of the quack harangue. It even includes the interpretation of urine, identified by some as the main additional comic theme differentiating the secular dramatic quack episodes of carnival farces from their closely related religious counterparts. Unusually, the Erlau play's merchant scene includes a counterpart to this speech, giving detailed insights into the abilities of the quack's wife, whose appellation, Medica, indicates her active and informed involvement in the family business. She interrupts Rubinus to request the second assistant, Pusterpalk, to enumerate her medical skills. This second monologue is largely disregarded in the older scholarship, or dismissed as a minor addition, a mere bawdy encore of Rubinus' harangue included only for comic repetition. In fact, comparison of the two monologues suggests a genuine division of labour between husband and wife, with the former covering routine surgical operations, including dental care, and the latter offering marriage guidance, coun-

17 RUPRECHT WIMMER analyses typical textual components of several German merchant scenes in Deutsch und Latein im Osterpiel, Untersuchungen zu den volkssprachlichen Entsprechungs-texten der lateinischen Strophenträger, München 1974, p. 78-104.

19 Here p. 54-5, 75, 80.
20 Here p. 65-6.
21 HAMMER (note 8), p. 251.
selling, and a women’s clinic. Toward the end of this merchant scene, Medica’s indignation at Medicus’ underselling of his medications to the three Marys leads to a verbally and physically abusive row between the couple.

While not missing this opportunity to poke fun at the foolish behaviour of his master, Rubinus defuses the couple’s row by persuading Medicus to take a nap. But the disloyal young servant has his own agenda in mind. Instead of following Medicus’ instructions to guard his wares while he sleeps, Rubinus uses this opportunity to seduce Medica into abandoning her elderly husband, and elope with him. The scribes who recorded medieval religious plays rarely wrote out their texts in full. Familiar passages were often indicated in cursory form, and knowledge of the traditional liturgical chants was generally assumed. The Erlau play offers an exceptionally detailed scripted merchant scene featuring many standard elements. Some merchant scenes appear to have been played from pre-existing scripts, others were written specially for one production or performance, yet others seem to have relied, to a greater or lesser extent, on improvisation. Even in the Erlau play, a stage direction at the beginning of its merchant scene confirms that it was regarded as a self-contained play within a play, even that it could, perhaps, be improvised by the players themselves, rather than being fully formally scripted in advance.

In the so-called ‘Raber Passion’, the scripted play thought to have provided the textual basis for the 1514 Bozen Passion cycle, there is no merchant scene at all, and no reference to quacks in the play’s text, or the stage plan for the first day. Michael notes, without further explanation, that the stage of the 1514 production’s Sunday Resurrection Play required a ‘mansio of the Medicus’. Others, reflecting a widespread acceptance that merchant scenes were not permitted inside churches, and that plays such as the Muri Easter Play, which did include quacks, could not be performed within churches, erroneously suggest that the Bozen Passion’s Christ the Gardener stands in for the quack scene.

Vocal evidence that the 1514 production did feature a merchant scene, significant for establishing that the absence of quacks from religious dramatic texts does not rule out their presence in performance, has been largely overlooked. This evidence is four quacks listed in the cycle’s cast lists as being played by two pairs of relatives, and a fifth player. The quack (Medicus) and his servant (Servus medici) were played by Marx Pader and the cutler Jacob Balbirer. The quack’s wife (Uxor medici) was shared by Sigmund Balbirer (who lived on the main square) and the Mullerin der Helle, and her maid (puella medici) was played by “Plasy Paders tochter”. Although members of both families took on several other roles too, it is surely no coincidence that the 1514 merchant scene was played by the Paders and the Balbirers, and highly likely that their performances drew heavily on the medical connections suggested by their family names. Barber-surgeons, whether attached to bath-houses (’Bader’) or not (’Barbierer’) were sedentary health practitioners whose commercial practice overlapped considerably with that of the quack troupe who competed directly for their clients. Numerous urban by-laws restrict the activities of itinerant performing quacks. Far from showcasing guest appearances by professional players from visiting troupes, as some have suggested, the merchant scene appears to have represented a welcome opportunity for medical practitioners of a particular community and local citizens close to them to rally against outsiders who commercially threatened them, and to ridicule and undermine the commercial credibility of their itinerant rivals.

23 Suppan/Janota (note 18), p. 66.
24 Here p. 77-8, this exchange is raised for the quarrelling quack couple who tend the injured old female magician of Aes gout Vasmachtiel. Keller (note 8), vol. II, p. 510-11: no. 57.
26 Suppan/Janota (note 18), p. 54: “Tunc veniet Rubinus proclamando ludum ("Here comes Rubinus and announces the play").”
30 Michael Pader was cast as both Quarta empiter and Simone propheta, his son as a peasant, and Jorg Pader as Primus miles Herodis, while Jacob Balbirer was also cast as the servants of Simon and Joseph, and his kinsman Sigmund Balbirer played Rabbi Samuel and John the Baptist.
31 Raber’s casting supports the suggestion made by Linke, Unstimmige Opposition (note 8), p. 102, that the increasing secularization of such interludes is marked by a notable change in emphasis, from contrast to the perception of Christ and Heaven, to ridicule of itinerants.
The text of the ‘Raber Passion’ follows that of the 1511 Hall Passion closely enough to suggest that this may have provided the model for its unscripted merchant scene.32 The four-strong troupe of the 1511 playtext, the quack Ipocras, his servant Ruben, wife Medica, and her maid Virgo, corresponds to the generically named foursome of the 1514 cast list. As scripted, the 1511 merchant scene is virtually free of scatological or sexual innuendo, portraying the quack couple and their maid and manservant not as an anarchic roving troupe, but as a polite and well-run municipal household. Although for the older scholarship, the simple, unhawdy nature of this scene points to an early version of the merchant scene, hints of the hard-sell patter and robust comic dialogue that are such a dominating feature of some Easter plays gleam through its speeches. In fact, early German versions of the merchant scene feature especially robust humour, and it is not impossible that the 1511 version was sanitized for publication.33 Although the hugely popular merchant scene is completely absent from the 1514 Bozen Passion cycle, as from most South Tyrolean texts, this does not mean, as some specialists have assumed, that quacks only rarely featured in actual performances of the region. Like the 1511 Hall Passion, Vigil Raber’s 1520 Ludos Pascalis features a fully scripted merchant scene.34 An explanation for the presence of quacks in the 1514 Bozen cast, despite their complete absence from the play text, is offered by the single mention of quacks in yet another South Tyrolean play text. A sentence at the appropriate point in the 1486 text of Lienhard Pfarrkircher’s Passion notes, in Latin: “here you may introduce the doctor and his servant, if you wish”.35 This is significant for establishing both that merchant scenes did not exclude mystery plays from being staged within churches, and that the absence of quacks from their texts does not rule out their presence on the stage. Evidently, the bawdy merchant scene, hugely popular with audiences but rather less so with the clergy, could be introduced into specific performances of mystery plays as an optional extra, unscripted in the text. The obvious starting points for tracing the geographic origins and diffusion of merchant scenes and other religious quack scenes are the flawed but magisterial works of KARL YOUNG and WALTHER LIPPHARDT.36 Some five percent of Lipphardt’s thousand or so Latin and largely Latin Easter texts note unguments or spices being taken to the tomb of Christ by the three Marys. Of these, only thirteen explicitly feature merchant scenes with one onstage merchant, and just two specify more than one merchant.37 These last, both dating to the thirteenth century, are the Tours Ludus paschali, with two male quacks, and the Benediktbeuern Easter play, perhaps the earliest text to specify a quack couple in its merchant scene. The theory that the Visitatio sepulchri provided the initial impetus, from which the merchant scene grew quasi-organically from the liturgy, and that it only “gradually abandoned also the Latin of the liturgy in favour of the language of ordinary life”,38 is widely accepted as a convenient truism. Overwhelmingly, female religious stage quacks occur in one well-defined narrow contextual range, that of mixed-gender quack troupes in the merchant scenes of the German or Bohemian Visitatio sepulchri. From the start, male quacks also featured in other narrative contexts, and no serious enquiry into religious stage quacks can ignore their sporadic appearances outside the Visitatio sepulchri (see appendix). Plays unrelated to the Easter story including merchants or medical practitioners unlikely to have been played as quacks, because they were clearly sedentary physicians, surgeons, midwives or apothecaries on the one hand, or not obviously medically active on the other, include numerous late fourteenth-century Italian rappresentazione sacre.39 Rarely, as in the Limoges Sponsus or The Blyssed Sacrament of 1461, plays of this first category feature indisputable quacks. Secondly, a few quacks occur in plays presenting the Easter story without a merchant scene, either because it has not survived or because they were written or played without one, as with the Magdalene quack scenes of the Benediktbeuern Passion Play or Wiener Passion Fragment. A surprisingly popular feature is a second quack scene before or after the merchant scene, as in the Muri, Pfäferser, Erlau III, Villinger or Semur plays (or even a third, as in the Text of the Berliner (rheinisches) Osterspiel. This third category demonstrates a significant structural element of medieval religious plays, particularly apparent in, for example the Semur Passion, namely the repetition of roles, locations, props and other visual elements through the use of parallel scenes.40

32 WACKERNELL (note 29), p. CCXXVII, p. 331-337.
34 ROLLOFF/TRAUB/LIPPHARDT (note 29), vol. III, p. 211-218, 313-316.
36 YOUNG (note 14); WALTHER LIPPHARDT: Lateinische Osterfeiern und Osterspiele [= LOO], 9 vols., Berlin 1975-90.
37 Fifteen texts in LOO specify onstage quacks (one male: LOO nos. 799, 801-4, 804a, 805, 822-3, 825, 827-9; two males: LOO no. 824; or a couple: LOO no. 830).
39 The appendix, below, can only indicate a random few examples for this category, peripheral to the present argument. Obstretices, or midwives, for example, represent a significant religious comic stock role; see ALLARGYCE NICOLL: Masks, mimes and miracles, studies in the popular theatre, London 1931, p. 184. For other healers in religious plays, see also here p. 186. Midwives feature in eleven of the seventeen French nativity plays analysed by REVOL (note 15), p. 530. He also analyses the roles of twenty-four French Easter plays and seven other biblical plays. Only two of each, respectively those of Origny and Tours, and the Sponsus play and Laon Ordo Joseph, include one or more merchants; see here p. 529, 531.
Although YOUNG, unlike LIFFHARDT, does not restrict his collection entirely to Latin Easter texts, gaining any kind of systematic overview of vernacular and non-Easter quack-related texts is surprisingly unstraightforward, especially as much of the vast secondary literature pre-dates significantly discovered sources.\textsuperscript{41} Whether or not the monastery of St. Martial of Limoges is, as has been claimed, ‘the true creator of the liturgical drama in France and perhaps in Europe’,\textsuperscript{42} it seems likely that the religious quack episode was created at St. Martial. By 1200, it was spreading from there through France, Spain and further afield.\textsuperscript{43} Taken as a whole, its distribution pattern, in Latin and macaronic religious texts, indicates a rapid initial diffusion to Eastern German-speaking Europe during the thirteenth century, complimented by a much slower spread north and southwards, and back into the central German-speaking regions, continuing into the sixteenth century. Quacks became increasingly, though never exclusively, associated with the Visitatio sepulchri, and the merchant scene became more and more important to the Easter play. The mercator juvenis who shares the stage with the three Marys at the tomb of Christ in Verses pascales de III M'arisij, a text of c. 1100 from Vich in Spain, has been identified as “the earliest example of an extra-biblical addition to the Easter Visitatio play”, in “the oldest extant scene in the biblical drama”,\textsuperscript{44} namely the Visitatio sepulchri. The Vich Easter performance is widely regarded as containing “the original literary kernel of the merchant scene”, and despite the numerous religious and secular non-Easter quack episodes known to specialists, for many, it is beyond question that the quack episode originated with the dramatic Easter ceremonies.\textsuperscript{45} However, indisputably one of the earliest speaking stage quacks is an oil-seller whose script is recorded not in Latin but in the Romance dialect. He is associated not with the Visitatio sepulchri, but featured in the macaronic Sporsus, a mystery play from Limoges based on the parable of the wise and foolish virgins.\textsuperscript{46} Because of the Limoges and Vich plays’ similar dating, there is no agreement on which is ear\textsuperscript{41} The highly important Melk, Brandenburger und Pfarßerser texts, for example, were first published only in 1948, 1986 and 2006. My thanks to Max Siller and Klaus Amann for drawing this last to my attention; SCHIRKE/PENZEL (note 16); CURT F. BEILGER & CARL SELMER: The Melk Schallkränzerspiel, an unpublished middle high German mercator play. In: Publications of the Modern Language Association of America 63 (1948), p. 38-62; KLAUS AMANN: Das Pfarßerser Passionsspiel. Edition, Untersuchung, Kommentar, Innsbruck 2006; see also Appendix, below.

\textsuperscript{42} EDITH A. WRIGHT: The dissemination of the liturgical drama in France, Bryn Mawr, Penn. 1936, p. 31.

\textsuperscript{43} AMSTUTZ (note 25), p. 172-5.

\textsuperscript{44} SYNTHETE MUIR: The biblical drama of medieval Europe, Cambridge 1995, p. 17, 140, 261 n. 20.

\textsuperscript{47} Matthew 25, v. 1-13.

\textsuperscript{49} DE BOOR (note 7), p. 346; WARNING (note 3), p. 80-84.

\textsuperscript{50} NICOLL (note 39), p. 186.

\textsuperscript{51} HARDIN CRAIG: English religious drama of the middle ages, Oxford 1967, p. 34. CRAIG incorrectly suggests that the role of the religious quack became a speaking part only in the fourteenth century.

The dramatic function of religious stage quacks

Specialists, who have mainly concentrated on merchant scene in this as in other aspects of the study of religious stage quacks, long widely favoured the view that their foremost dramatic function was as a vehicle either for realism of a very literal, naive type,\textsuperscript{52} or for bawdy comedy. Earlier generations of historians, shocked that merchant scenes could be so heavily larded with a broad humour based squarely on profanities, scatology and sexual misconduct, discounted the possibility that they could be a coherent part of any sophisticated dramatic or didactic strategy. Typically, they denounced them as indecent, "loathsome smut", whose "vile filth" was of possible appeal only to the lowest social strata. Similar views were far from unknown at the time of the performances themselves. In her twelfth century tract, Hortus Deliciarum, the Abbess of Hohenburg, Herrad of Landsberg, concludes that, despite their didactic value, the disorder and fooling around they precipitated justified the prohibition of religious plays. In his Tractatus de prectione Dei, John Hus bitterly regrets his youthful involvement in the "outrage and infamy" of the late fourteenth century religious plays staged inside Prague cathedral. The belligerent peasant actors of Eulenspiegel's thirteenth tale, and the subversive, unruly devils of François Rabelais' fictionalized account of François Villon's passion play rehearsal, offer extreme literary examples of the religious stage's potential for ungodly folly. Comparable folly was denounced in Martin Luther's detailed critique of the comic elements of Passion and Easter plays:

Und sonderlich ist das unchristlich, wo man solche narrengetyndt treyht ynn der gemeyne, da man zu samen kompt Gotts wort zu hoeren und die schrift zu leren, wie sichs denn alle zeyt begibt, wo viel zu sammen komen, ob sie gleich zu erst anfahen von ernsten sachen, doch bald fallen auf leichtfertige, lose, lecherliche teydinge, damit man die zeyt verleuret und bessers versaeumet. Wie denn bisher geschehen ist, das man auffs osterfest cyn nerriisch lecherlich geschwetz unter die predigt gemengt hat, die schelaffer mit wacker zu machen [...] und mit reynen allenspiel getrieben hat, gleich auch mit [...] der passio Christi [...].

Medieval precedents notwithstanding, the disgusted reaction of modern scholars to the obscenity of religious stage quacks is now viewed as unhistorical, and they have long since achieved recognition as one of the more complex products of medieval performance culture. The merchant scene has been reimagined within a flourishing literary tradition, and increasingly, non-textual approaches are providing further perspectives, by reclaiming the visual record, and performative aspects of religious plays such as dance, acrobatics and above all music.

While there is no consensus concerning the dramatic function of religious stage quacks, and those outside the Easter context continue to attract little critical attention, a dazzling spectrum of theories attempts to account for the merchant scene's inclusion in mystery plays. The former frontrunner, that it reflects elements of pre-Christian Germanic pagan folk ritual, although heavily tainted by ideological concerns, still informs suggestions that the merchant scene integrates pagan and Christian aspects of the Easter resurrection festival. In an article published in 1974, Jakobson identifies one episode, of one merchant scene, as the key to their interpretation as burlesque analogues of Christ's resurrection, namely the mastichair's restoration to life of the boy Isaac, in the fourteenth century Bohemian 'Museum fragment'. For him, the quack is the quasi-shamanic star of a scene, combining liturgical and folklore elements grounded in the common substratum of 'pre-Christian rites'. He suggests that they are intended to burlesque and ridicule the liturgy, to promote in spectators the death-defying risus paschalis or ritual laughter traditionally associated with religious celebrations of the triumph of life over death. Defying the central (and unsurmountable) dilemma of having to prove a direct, unbroken performative continuity between shamanistic ritual and religious stage quacks, he interprets the merchant scene as saluting Easter "not as a compromise with paganism, but as a Christian tradition in its own right". This viewpoint has proved extremely influential. Others variously promote the merchant scene as a diverting counterbalance to the religious tension of the plays' biblical content, as social satire, or as a device for drawing spectators into the dramatic action on a personal level. Yet another perspective identifies the religious quack episode as a quasi-autonomous secular farce, with origins inspired by literature or popular drama. Some scholars view it as a stepping stone towards artistic freedom, a 'ready made' play within a play, even as a "comic carcinoma". They suggest that it was written and perhaps performed not by the amateurs responsible for mystery plays as a whole, but by mountebanks drawing on their own professional stage repertoires, or by 52 Creizenach (note 13), p. 244, 357.

57 Jakobson (note 54), p. 681.
58 Published with an English translation by Veltruský, A sacred farce (note 5), p. 333-57.
59 Here p. 330.
Theology students (clerici vagantes). The Latin content of many merchant scenes weighs against the authorship of professional quacks, if not students. The castlists of the 1514 Bozen Passion confirm that quack roles, no less than any others, could be assigned to respected members of the local church community. Although variants of this theory still receive sporadic support from some quarters, it is clear that merchant scenes were not acted by genuine performing quacks.

LINKE lucidly explains the theological reasoning behind the comic elements of the Easter quack episode. He plausibly identifies the dramatic function of the merchant scene as the provision of a secular setting, within the biblical story, that serves to heighten the intensity of religious plays' theologically motivated contrast between profane and spiritual concerns, not by glorifying worldly pleasures, but by ridiculing them. Viewed in this perspective, the merchant scene occupies a significant place in the tradition of Narrenliteratur (Folly Literature), in which court or stage fools stand as powerful metaphors for the frailties and temptations of the human condition. Its quacks exemplify human folly by demonstrating concrete examples simultaneously intended as secular entertainment, didactic and religious instruction, and in the medical sense of therapeutic laughter, intended to actively promote healing in its audience. This tradition's multiple intentions are demonstrated with unusual clarity by a medical treatise of 1610, in which the deeply religious South Tyrolean physician Hippolytus Guarinonius frames, within a moralising context, over thirty descriptions of professional stage business performed by marketplace comedies of the performing quacks. Several concern scatological comic stage business, or lazzi, considerably more explicit than anything offered by the Easter play texts, that evoke the sheer exuberant physicality of quack stage business in a way that no play text can. They thus provide dramatic exempla offering his readers a literal cure for folly, by warning them against the sins and the vices. Despite concerning the textual use of secular dramatic descriptions in a seventeenth century medical treatise, the passage of 1612 in which Guarinonius explicates this intention affords valuable insights into the reasoning behind the use of bawdy humour on the late medieval religious stage. In it, Guarinonius robustly admonishes a reader who challenges the comic epi-economic success, by engaging audience attention and encouraging relaxed spending, and they pitched their performances accordingly. As parody, religious quacks worked not by inventing genuine quack rhetoric, but by heightening it. Nor did they rely on wholesale borrowings from ‘secular’ literary quack parodies, transplanted into religious plays with minimal regard for liturgical issues. Genuine medieval quacks created their wide spectrum of performative comic business and monologues within a thriving interdependent literary tradition, that produced texts geared to the didactic and economic agendas of the religious and secular stage, as well as to the robust orality of marketplace rhetoric.

63 Hippolytus Guarinonius: Die Grewel der Verwüstung Menschlichen Geschlechts […]. Ingolstadt 1610.

Conclusions

The confinement of religious stage quacks to the merchant scene, and the standardization of its familiar cast and comic business within the Visitatio se-pulchri, was never complete. Rather than as one unique response to the specific liturgical situation of the three Marys at the tomb of Christ, the religious quack episode has a self-contained, improvisational nature reminiscent of the professional stage. It shares this and other characteristics of the transferenceable popular secular comic stage business or lazzi that are the stock in trade of the commedia dell’arte. However disparate their liturgical contexts, the possibility that the earliest religious quack episodes, and notably those from Vich and Limoges, were independent literary creations, seems remote enough to be completely beyond coincidence. Questions concerning the precise dating or linguistic analysis of the surviving manuscripts are obscured by the fact that many are based, to whatever extent, on significantly earlier texts or performance practice. Although issues of precedence surrounding early stage quacks remain unresolved, it is clear that their development on the medieval religious stage is crucial to an understanding of their impact on literature and drama. Religious stage quacks mark a significant early milestone in the development of the quack harangue and the quack quarrel as literary conventions, and cast long shadows over the figure of the quack in early modern literature. Additionally, they may be viewed as foreshadowing several significant strategies of the professional comic stage. Their three central stock characters, the quack, his wife and their servant, may be compared to the commedia dell’arte stage master-servant-inamorata trio. Their popular comic set-pieces share the characteristic potential of lazzi for improvisation, transferal from one play or dramatic situation to another, and extension or curtailment according to the requirements of individual audiences or sponsors. The comic stage business and stock roles of religious quack episodes deserve recognition as a significant potential source for certain of the most characteristic and popular dramatic strategies and roles of the early professional stage.

Appendix: Chronological overview of some medieval religious stage quacks

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>DATE</th>
<th>NAME / TYPE</th>
<th>DOCUMENT / LANGUAGE / REFERENCE</th>
<th>QUACKS</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>11th-12th cent</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>c. 1100</td>
<td>Le Sponsus (Mystère des Viegues auge et des Viegues folles)</td>
<td>Text (30 of 105 verses) [Latin &amp; Romance; YOUNG (note 14), II, p. 362-4]</td>
<td>5x foolish virgins 2M or couples or more than 2 [Mercatores-merchaans]</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>13th cent</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>c. 1200</td>
<td>Incipit Ordo paschalis Klosterneuburger OS, nr Wien</td>
<td>Text [Latin: LOO 829]</td>
<td>3x Marys 1M [Specianarius]</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>c. 1230</td>
<td>Benediktbeurer PS (Carmina Burana) Seckau, nr Knittelfeld, Austria</td>
<td>Text [Latin &amp; German: HARTL, p. 12-23]</td>
<td>M. Magd in house of Simon the Pharisee buys cosmetics / repents / returns to buy unguents Couple [mercator-venditor-chramfer-mercator iuvenis / uxor sua]</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>c. 1230</td>
<td>[&quot;Großes&quot;] Benediktbeurer OS (Carmina Burana) Seckau, nr Knittelfeld</td>
<td>Text [Latin &amp; German: LOO 830]</td>
<td>3x Marys Couple [Apothecarius-mercator iuvenis / Uxor apothecarius]</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Mid 13th cent</td>
<td>Ludus paschali [Tours] Normandy</td>
<td>Text (54 of 315 verses) [Latin: LOO 824]</td>
<td>3x Marys 2M [mercator-mercator iuvenis / alias mercator-Dominus]</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>13th cent</td>
<td>Berthold of Regensburg (d.1272)</td>
<td>Sermon</td>
<td>3x Marys identifies servants of merchant scene as devils [Pusterbalk / Lasterbalk]</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

69 My thanks to Matthew Peacock for advising on the Latin.
70 EDUARD HARTL: Das Benediktbeurer Passionsspiel, das St. Galler Passionsspiel, nach den Handschriften herausgegeben, Halle/Saale 1952.
DATE | NAME / TYPE | DOCUMENT /LANGUAGE /REFERENCE | QUACKS
--- | --- | --- | ---
Late 13th or 14th cent | Gerona 14th cent | Text [Latin: LOO 822] | 3x Marys IM [Mercator]

14th cent | Barcelona | Text [Latin: LOO 799] | 3x Marys rubrics imply singing part

Early 14th cent | Prague, St George Convent | Text [Latin: LOO 801] | 3x Marys IM [Unguentarius]

Early 14th cent | Prague, St George Convent (v10) | Text [Latin: LOO 802] | 3x Marys IM [Unguentarius]

Early 14th cent | Prague, St George Convent | Text, silent part, v14 [Latin: LOO 803] | 3x Marys IM [Unguentarius]

Early 14th cent | Prague, St George Convent | Text [Latin: LOO 804] | 3x Marys IM [Unguentarius]

Early 14th cent | Prague, St George Convent | Text [Latin: LOO 804a] | 3x Marys IM [Unguentarius]

Early 14th cent | Prague, St George Convent | Text, v7 [Latin: LOO 805] | 3x Marys IM [Unguentarius]

Early 14th cent | La Passion du Palatinus | Text, 1996vv; v1864-1942 [French: FRANK/RIBARD, 75, p. 231-5] | 3x Marys IM [I espiciens-sire espiciert]

1315-17 | Ludus paschalis | Text (79 of 260 verses) [Latin & French: LOO 825] | 3x Marys IM [Marchant-gentius marchans-saiges marchans-jovenes marchans]

An account of c. 1312-14 summarizing the convent's Easter ceremonies for the nun Heuls de Conlans does not note the merchant scene, perhaps introduced by her to this convent [French: WRIGHT (note 42), p. 184-6]

---

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>DATE</th>
<th>NAME / TYPE</th>
<th>DOCUMENT / LANGUAGE / REFERENCE</th>
<th>QUACKS</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>14th cent</td>
<td>Berlin-thüringisches OS-Fragment</td>
<td>Text, 160v. [Latin &amp; German: SEELMANN, W. 1926]</td>
<td>3x Marys Couple &amp; 2nd M &amp; old female client [Mercator-herre meyster min arzt-eyme kunstigen man / Rubin-lieber knecht min-iunger jungelin-lebber jungelinseliger knappe iung / min vrouwe vor Authonia / eyme alden wibe]</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Mid 14th cent</td>
<td>Mastichak</td>
<td>Text, 431 lines [Latin &amp; Bohemian: VELTRUSKY: A sacred farce (note 5), p. 332]</td>
<td>3x Marys Couple &amp; 2M &amp; 2x clients [Mercator-Yporas-mistre Severine-mercator iuvens / Rubins-Rubin z Benacké (i.e. of Venice) / Pustpalk / auctor mercatoris / Abraham &amp; son Isaac]</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td>Mercator dictis: Rubin, ich se dort vil lute. Rubin dictis: Herre, da ist iarnmarkt hüte</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

c. 1440
Résurrection
Abbaye Sainte-Geneviève, Paris

Text
[French: MATHIEU (note 12), p. 68-99]

3x Marys
1M [D’espicer-Maître-Sire]

1452
Arnoù Gréban
Le Mystère de la Passion
Anger

Text
[French: GRÉBAN, p. 380-2, 390-2]

2 ‘quack’ scenes:
1. A female cloth-merchant sells Joseph and Nicodemus Jesus’s grave-cloth
1F [merchandize]
2. 3x Marys
1M [espicer]

15th cent
San Tommaso
Italy

Text
[Italian: D’ANCONA, I, p. 582-4]

Physicians at a court deathbed
3M [Primo medico-Maestro Antonino di balordia / altro medico-Maestro Guido di carcagna / Arrighetto-servia]

2nd half of 15th cent
La rappresentazione della Conversione di Santa Maria Maddalena
Italy

Text

M. Maggi & Lazarea
3M [Primo medico-maestro Antonio / messer Matteo-secondo medico / maestro Dino]

2nd half of 15th cent
La rappresentazione dell’ortolano elemosiniere
Italy

Text
[Italian & Italian: BANFI (note 83), p. 511-36: 527-33]

L’ortolano
3M [primo medico-maestro / secondo medico / terzo medico-reverende magister]

2nd half of 15th cent
La rappresentazione del re superbo
Italy

Text

Il re superbo
2M [primo medico-maestro / secondo medico-maestro]

2nd half of 15th cent
Vno miracolo del la nostra Donna: cieco la presentazione di stella italy

Text

Miracle of the Virgin Mary
2M [primo medico-degni mastri / secondo medico-maestro]

2nd half of 15th cent
Wiener Rubinstein

Single role text, 212v

[Italian & German: SCHRODER / MENCÍK, p. 69]

3x Marys
3M & 1F [Herr-mayster Ypochraz-Medicus / Rubinis-Rubin-in-Pseudau / Eechard / Greten / Marcell-knicht]

2nd half of 15th cent
Lübener

OS-Fragment

Text
[German: see SEEL-MANN (note 76), p. 68-96]

3x Marys
3M & 1F [medicus / Rubin / Pusterbalg / mercariz]

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>DATE</th>
<th>NAME / TYPE</th>
<th>DOCUMENT / LANGUAGE / REFERENCE</th>
<th>QUACKS</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>c. 1495</td>
<td>Johan Michel: Mystère de la Résurrection de Notre Seigneur Jésus-Christ</td>
<td>Text [French: ABRAHAMS (note 10); p. 116; MATTHIEU (note 12), p. 66-7]</td>
<td>3x Mary &amp; Johanna (Herod’s wife) 1M [apoticaire-espicière]</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1496</td>
<td>Harlem Fragment</td>
<td>Single role text [Latin: LOO 828]</td>
<td>3x Marys 1M [Physicus]</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>16th cent</td>
<td>Egerer Fronleichnamsspiel (Eger, Hungary, formerly Erlau)</td>
<td>Text, vv. 7864-7901 [Latin &amp; German: MILCHSACK]</td>
<td>3x Marys 2M [mercator / Rubius]</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1504</td>
<td>St Meriseck Cornwall, England</td>
<td>Text, vv. 1378-1485 [Cornish: CHAMBERS (note 9), p. 169, 186 ed. Whitney Stokes, II</td>
<td>Emperor Constantine, a leper, buys a remedy from a doctor and his clerk 2M</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

91 Gustav Milchsack: Egerer Fronleichnamsspiel, Tübingen 1881.

---

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>DATE</th>
<th>NAME / TYPE</th>
<th>DOCUMENT / LANGUAGE / REFERENCE</th>
<th>QUACKS</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>1511</td>
<td>Haller PS</td>
<td>Hall, Tyrol</td>
<td>3x Marys 2M &amp; 2F [medicus-Iporcas-lieber gruschl zart-Her-miester-lieber her mein-lieber maister / serus-Rubein-lieber jungling mein-lieber knecht / Medicae-mine fraw / Virgo medici]</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1516-26</td>
<td>Ludus passe Codex Clementinum Bohemia</td>
<td>1 Text [Czech &amp; Latin; VELTRUSKY: A sacred farce (note 5), p. 116, 126]</td>
<td>3x Marys 1M [erus Barbatus falticus ad morern medicy]</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>7157</td>
<td>Henrich Hältscher, d.1547 Alsfelder Kaufmannsrolle</td>
<td>Single role text, 44v [Latin &amp; German: JANOTA (note 72), II, p. 193, 197-8, 209]</td>
<td>3x Marys Couple [Primus mercator / vexor]</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1538</td>
<td>Hans Salat Luzerner PS Lucerne, Switzerland</td>
<td>1. Text [German: WYSS, p. 269-71]</td>
<td>3x Marys 1M [Apentegger]</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1539</td>
<td>Gerona Barcelona</td>
<td>Ecclesiastical decree [Latin: LOO V, p. 1661-2]</td>
<td>3x Marys permitted Apothecarius couple &amp; son and Mercator couple, prohibited moorish couple or maid or musicians</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1560</td>
<td>Zacharius Bletz Luzerner PS</td>
<td>Director’s notes (Day 1) [German: EVANS (note 92), p. 156]</td>
<td>3x Marys Unspecified [Appoteggi]</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1566</td>
<td>Lewis Wager</td>
<td>A new enderlafe, never before this tyme printed, entretaining of the life and repen- tance of Marie Mag- dalene.</td>
<td>Printed text [London 1566, ] M. Magd: is tempted to buy ’swete oynments’ 1M [Ifidellite, the Vice]</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>DATE</th>
<th>NAME / TYPE</th>
<th>DOCUMENT / LANGUAGE / REFERENCE</th>
<th>QUACKS</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>c. 1580</td>
<td>Mikołaj de Wilko-wiecko</td>
<td>Text [UDALSKA,95 p. 177]</td>
<td>3x Marys 1M [Raben]</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>L'histoire de la gloireuse resurrection du seigneur</td>
<td>Krakow, Poland</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1583</td>
<td>Renward Cysat</td>
<td>[German: EVANS (note 92), p. 144, 166, 219]</td>
<td>3x Marys 1M [Appentegger]</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>(apothecary and ‘Stadt-</td>
<td>Director's notes Plan (Day 1)</td>
<td>Apothegker  Appentegker / knaben</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>schreiber’)</td>
<td>Notes (Day 1) Cast (Day 1)</td>
<td>Serius / Apothegker</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>Luzerner PS</td>
<td>Plan (Day 2)</td>
<td>Die Apothegk</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>c. 1580s</td>
<td>Lo Jutgamen General</td>
<td>Text, vv. 859-87, 2449-82</td>
<td>Last Judgment: inclusion in list of sinners</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>c. 1599</td>
<td>[Donaujeschinger]</td>
<td>A Text, v193-238, 4046-72</td>
<td>A 2 quack scenes:</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td>B Plan</td>
<td>M. Magistere</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td>C Verz. der Bühnenorte (3 lists, for intro, Days 1 &amp; 2)</td>
<td>1M [Appenteciker-Krämer]</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td>B No quacks / apothecary (wrong day or place?)</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>
|          |                                  |                                 | C 3. Die appenteck-6, die appenteck-
|          |                                  |                                 | 15. der appenteck     |

97 EDUARD HARTL: Das Drama des Mittelalters. Passionsspiele II (Das Donaujeschinger Passionsspiel), Darmstadt 1966.

JODY ENDERS

The Devil in the Flesh of Theater

Der merkwürdige, apokryphe Fall von Bar-le-Duc (1485), in dem ein Schauspieler noch im Teufelskostüm seine Ehefrau vergewaltigt, vereint, was nie hätte getrennt werden dürfen: Ethik als Corpus des Wissens und das Körperwissen des Theaters. Der Fall erinnert uns daran, dass Theater besser (wenn auch manchmal moralisch schlechter) als jedes andere literarische Medium dazu geeignet ist, Akteure dazu zu bringen, Gedanken in die Tat umzusetzen. Da die Geschichte außerdem mit einer moralistischen Pointe aufwurtet, mit der kaum eine moderne lehrhafte Erzählung konkurrieren kann – einem missgebildeten und monströsen Kind als Erzeugnis dieser Vergewaltigung – inkarniert sie im Wortsinne ihre zentrale Aussage, dass im Theater Intentionen verkörpert werden. Indem die Anekdote von Bar-le-Duc den Prozess der Realisierung von Theater mit der Genese des Verbrechens zusammenführt, erzählt sie von einem theatralen Herz der Finsternis, das wir die Angst vor dem unmittelbar Drohenden, dem Imminenter nennen könnten. Diese ist für die Virtuosität des Theaters ebenso relevant wie für jene der Ethik.

How dangerous was religious theater? Not just as words but as action? Not just as drama on the page but as acts on the stage? If we believe several chroniclers of Metz, something happened in 1485 that offered, quite literally, living proof that medieval theatrical life was very dangerous indeed, albeit not necessarily in the ways that one might expect. According to the exceptionally loquacious Philippe de Vigneules, it all happened one fine day when a certain actor, whose name is unknown, returned home after his performance in the city of Bar-le-Duc (about 250 kilometers east of Paris). We happen to know that a play was performed at all for one reason only: the terrible thing that happened afterward. One of the actors, still wearing his devil-suit, apparently proceeded to force himself on his wife:

Or avint que, en ce meisme tamps, fut juez ung jeux à Bar le Duc, auquelle estoient aulcuns hommes pourtant le parsonnaige de dyablez. Et, entre eux, en y olf ung que en son habit volut avoir la compagnie de sa femme. Et elle le diffroit, et demandoit quil volloit faire; et il luy respondit: 'Je veult', dit il, 'faire le dyable'. Et, quy que sa femme se sceut defiandre, force luy fut de obéy.1

1 La Chronique de Philippe de Vigneules. Ed. by CHARLES BRUNEAU, 4 vols., Metz 1927-33 (vol. 3), pp. 114-115. Hereafter CPV. Compare with the version that appears in Les Chroniques de la Ville de Metz, recueillies, mises en ordre et publiées pour la première fois. Le Doyen de St. Thiébault. – Jean Aubrion. – Philippe de Vigneules. – Pratillon. – Annales Mea-