Text and performance: medieval religious stage quacks and the commedia dell’arte

How to cite:

For guidance on citations see FAQs.

Version: Version of Record

Link(s) to article on publisher’s website:

Copyright and Moral Rights for the articles on this site are retained by the individual authors and/or other copyright owners. For more information on Open Research Online’s data policy on reuse of materials please consult the policies page.
Trends in Medieval Philology

Edited by
Ingrid Kasten · Niklaus Largier
Mireille Schnyder

Editorial Board
Ingrid Bennewitz · John Greenfield · Christian Kiening
Theo Kobusch · Peter von Moos · Uta Störmer-Caysa

Volume 11

Walter de Gruyter · Berlin · New York

Transformationen des Religiösen

Performativität und Textualität im geistlichen Spiel

Herausgegeben von
Ingrid Kasten und Erika Fischer-Lichte

Redaktionelle Mitarbeit
Elke Koch

Walter de Gruyter · Berlin · New York
Inhaltsverzeichnis

INGRID KASTEN
Transformationen des Religiösen. Performativität und Textualität im geistlichen Spiel .......................................................... VII

I. Das geistliche Spiel als cultural performance

ERIKA FISCHER-LICHTE
Theater und Fest – Anmerkungen zum Verhältnis von Theatralität und Ritualität in den geistlichen Spielen des Mittelalters .............. 3

ECKEHARD SIMON
Geistliche Fastnachts spiele. Zum Grenzbereich zwischen geistlichem und weltlichem Spiel ..................................................... 18

JUTTA EMING
Simultaneität und Verdoppelung. Motivationsstrukturen im geistlichen Spiel .............................................................. 46

GLENN EHRSTINE
Präsenzverwaltung: Die Regulierung des Spielrahmens durch den Proklamator und andere expositores ludi .................. 63

WERNER RÖCKE
Maria Magdalena und Judas Ischariot. Das Alsfelder Passionsspiel und die Erlauer Spiele als Experimentierfelder des Bösen und soziokultureller Standards im Spätmittelalter ............. 80

II. Performativität und Textualität

M. A. KATRITZKY
Text and Performance: Medieval Religious Stage Quacks and the Commedia dell’Arte .................................................. 99

JODY ENDERS
The Devil in the Flesh of Theater ............................................. 127

CHRISTIAN KIENING
Präsenz – Memoria – Performativität. Überlegungen im Blick auf das Innsbrucker Fronleichnamsspiel .................................. 139
Transformationen des Religiösen
Performativität und Textualität im geistlichen Spiel

Die Relationen von Text und Kultur, von Orality und Skripturalität, unterscheiden sich in der Kultur des Mittelalters beträchtlich von den Verhältnissen in der Moderne. Mit dem Konzept des Performativen können auf systematischer Ebene verschiedene Dimensionen erschlossen werden – eine sprachwissenschaftliche bzw. sprachphilosophische Dimension, eine Dimension der cultural performance und eine ästhetische Dimension –, die geeignet sind, den Blick nicht nur für systematische Aspekte, sondern auch für historische Differenzen und Transformationsprozesse zu schärfen. Die geistlichen Spiele, die in vielen europäischen Kulturen des Mittelalters bis in die Moderne nachweisbar sind, stehen in engem Zusammenhang mit Frömmigkeitspraktiken der Zeit und beziehen ihre Sujets aus dem Kult, aus der Bibel und aus Legenden. Die Stoffe bleiben auch später in der religiösen Praxis, in der bildenden Kunst, im Theater, in der Literatur und schließlich im Film produktiv. Von Anfang an war deshalb geplant, trotz der Schwerpunktsetzung auf das geistliche Spiel die Perspektive exemplarisch auf die Gegenwart hin offen zu halten.¹

Die Tagung konnte an die seit einiger Zeit deutlich belebte Diskussion über die Spezifik theateraler Formen in Mittelalter und früher Neuzeit anknüpfen.

¹ Das Konzept wurde in Zusammenarbeit von Ingrid Kasten, Erika Fischer-Lichte, Jutta Eming und Elke Koch entwickelt.
M. A. KATRITZKY

Text and Performance
Medieval Religious Stage Quacks and the Commedia dell’Arte

Introduction

Quacks were the least respectable and respected medieval healers. Themselves significant promoters of professional stage spectacle, they are the earliest and most prominent non-biblical characters in religious drama, where they make an increasing contribution from the twelfth century onwards (see Appendix). Situated on a broad continuum seamlessly bridging the gaping chasm between the solidly respectable municipal merchant or medical practitioner and reviled, rootless charlatans and mountebanks, quacks combined, in widely varying proportions, three elements: the medical, the itinerant, and the theatrical. They sold herbs, drugs, patent miracle-cures with closely guarded secret recipes, and cosmetics. Some also prescribed and administered medication and treatment to patients, either for a variety of ailments or as specialists. They were itinerant, in that they went to their customers, rather than waiting for customers to come to them. Some travelled continuously across the length and breadth of Europe, from one annual fair to another, some within their own country or region, others only intermittently, or hardly at all. Above all, quacks were performers. They used theatricality, in its widest possible sense, to attract customers and to promote and advertise their pharmaceuticals and health care services. Contextualized within the deceitful economy of the marketplace, religious stage quacks provide a profane secular counterpart to the healing Christ of the Gospel miracles. As grotesques and gargoyles proliferated in late medieval Northern church decoration, so comic episodes caricaturing the medical inadequacies, cupidity and crude humour of quacks came to dominate its religious drama. Typically, they feature during the Visitatio sepulchri, or visit of the three Marys to the tomb of Christ. Here, in an episode known as the merchant scene, an itinerant pedlar, variously characterized as a mastickar, medicus, mercator or unguentarius, with or without a wife and troupe, sometimes sells the Marys herbs and spices before they go to embalm Christ’s body, and discover the empty tomb.

Religious quack episodes occur most frequently in connection with the three Marys’ need for unguents at the tomb of Christ, and they are often considered primarily in terms of a response to this single liturgical requirement. The present investigation seeks to develop a pan-European holistic approach recognizing that by no means all religious stage quacks are confined to the merchant scene, and accommodating their varied narrative contexts. The fluid boundaries and synergies between the medieval religious stage and secular performance practice are perhaps nowhere more apparent than with respect to dramatic quack episodes. The present article overviews religious quacks as a whole, with a view to highlighting their resonances with the early modern professional stage (see Appendix). Specialists have sought the origins of the commedia dell’arte in a wide range of contexts, not least in classical drama, but never in any systematic way in the quack episodes of the religious stage.

To a certain extent, these may even be viewed as precursors of the characteristic stage business, or lazzi, of the professional stage. The comic hallmark of the commedia dell’arte performances of Italian secular professional players, lazzi were self-contained expandable units of improvised stage business. Featuring stock characters, they were designed to be expanded or contracted in response to specific audiences, and to be transferrable from one play to another with minimal modification. Many centuries before their adoption by professional performing troupes, religious quack episodes pioneered stock roles with predictable verbal, visual and physical comic routines, and the clear potential for improvisation. Although such dramatic strategies foreshadow the professional stage in several significant ways, only one has received wide-spread recognition. This concerns the stock quack assistant Rubin, often identified as a forerunner of the stock stage fools of the itinerant professionals, such as the English troupe’s Picklehering or Jean Potage, or the Harlequin or Zanni of the Italian commedia dell’arte. These stage fools made a major impact as the servant character who joins his master and a young female as one of the three stock roles whose stars rose in the sixteenth century, just as the power of church drama was fading. They dominated professional Italian drama throughout the early modern period as the central commedia dell’arte trio of master, servant and inamorata. One of the most important comic configurations of professional drama, this trio was heralded by the three main stock roles of the merchant scene. These are not “the eternal triangle of the doctor, Rubin and Pusterpalk”, but a far more significant, widespread and rarely identified group, the mixed-gender threesome of the quack couple and their chief assistant.

The merchant scene

The Gospel of John relates that, directly following the Crucifixion, Joseph of Arimathea and Nicodemus wound the body of Christ in linen and spices on that same evening, using a hundred pounds of myrrh and aloes provided by Nicodemus. Matthew does not mention spices at all. Luke relates that the Holy women prepared the spices on the Sabbath but observed the traditional day of rest, waiting until early on Sunday morning to take them to the tomb. Only Mark indicates that the spices for embalming Christ’s body were not purchased until after Good Friday and the Sabbath: “when the Sabbath was past, Mary Magdalene, and Mary the mother of James, and Salome, had bought sweet spices, that they might come and anoint him”. Notwithstanding such tenuous New Testament indications, onstage speaking quacks had already established themselves on the religious stage by the eleventh century. They were pioneered in Latin and macaronic mystery plays preserved in texts dating from around 1100 onwards, some of which specify a merchant or spice merchant, and became extremely popular, sometimes dominant non-biblical characters in the Visitatio sepulchri, the pivotal scene of medieval Easter observances and Passion performances. Widely regarded as crucial to the emergence of religious theatre from church ceremony, the Visitatio sepulchri and the quacks of its so-called merchant scene have attracted considerable scholarly attention.\textsuperscript{5}

---

By the fourteenth century, standardization of the merchant scene and its stock cast and comic business was setting in. French, Bohemian and especially German Easter plays increasingly supplemented the lone spice merchant with members of an itinerant troupe. Indisputably, the vast majority of genuine quack troupes were led by men. However, it was profitable to provide, in parallel to the quack's often very public marketplace practice, a more discrete private consultation facility for female patients.\textsuperscript{6} Numerous early modern documents refer to male healers who shared their medical practise with a female healer capable of providing such a service, generally their wife. A similar pattern had already marked the activities of some quack troupes of the religious stage.\textsuperscript{7} Here, as the vernacular increasingly replaced Latin, merchant scenes gradually expanded to dominate a whole section, often featuring a troupe led by a married couple, each actively contributing to the commercial success of the business, and aided by one or more servants. Although religious stage quacks drew on vernacular literature, as well as directly on the orality, performativity and crude humour of the genuine quacks, attempts to prove their precedence in secular plays founder on chronological issues. The unreliable, fragmentary pre-eighteenth-century evidence concerning English 'hero combat' mummers' plays, and numerous surviving texts of 'Arztspiele' or secular German carnival farces featuring the doctor and his attendant, all postdate the earliest merchant scenes.\textsuperscript{8} If the exact connections between the Eng-

\textsuperscript{5} JARABA: F. VELTRUSKÝ summarizes the most significant French and German merchant scenes in a sacred farce from medieval Bohemia: Mastičák, Ann Arbor 1985, p. 78-117. See also appendix, below.

\textsuperscript{7} The family-based quack troupe explicitly specified by the texts of some religious quack episodes, including the Sponsor, and featured in certain others whose texts include only a single speaking quack (for example the 1583 Lucerne play), reflects traditional economic practice in the itinerant healthcare industry. As such, its constituent members are neither, as suggested by some specialists, primarily dictated by religious imperative (HELMUT DE BOOR: Die Textgeschichte der lateinischen Osterfiestern, Tübingen 1967, p. 359) nor by cultic pagan precedent. Warning (note 3), p. 85, elegantly turns this last theory on its head, suggesting that religious stage quacks provided a foothold for pagan elements to enter Christian drama.

\textsuperscript{8} MAX SILLER: Ausgewählte Aspekte des Fastnachtsspiels im Hinblick auf die Aufführung des Sterzingerspiels der scheissend. In: Fastnachtspiel – Commedia dell’Arte, Gemeinsamkeiten – Gegensätze. Akten des I. Symposiums der Sterzinger Oster spiele (31.3.-3.4.1991). Ed. by MAX SILLER. Innsbruck 1992 (Schriften-Schriften 290), p. 147-159, here p. 147 [Ipoecas (1510), Doctor knowfach Von Claus putzin (1511), der scheissend (1516), Arzt hinnimm (1520), Ain zentprechverg (1529), Doctors appoign (1531)]. See also Fastnachtspiele aus dem fünfzehnten Jahrhundert, Ed. by ADELBERT VON KELLER, 3 vols., Stuttgart 1853-8 (Litterarischer Verein XXVIII-XXX), nos. 6, 48, 54, 57, 82, 85, 98, 101, 114, 120; CARL HAMMER: The lish plays and religious drama are obscure, it is clear that the surviving German plays draw heavily on religious drama, often freely basing their healers on the merchant scene's quack couple and their servants.\textsuperscript{9}

Even the French literary sources which get closest to the orality of genuine medieval quack harangues, dramatic monologues of the type pioneered in the mid thirteenth-century by Rutebeuf and Adam de la Halle, postdate the earliest merchant scenes by over a century.\textsuperscript{10} In possibly the earliest known French secular drama, Halle's Li jus Adan ou de la Feuillée of 1262, a quack boasts of his travels and diagnoses urin.\textsuperscript{11} MATHIEU's compelling textual investigation into the interrelationships between the merchant scene and secular literature establishes beyond doubt the dependence of French merchant scenes of the fourteenth and fifteenth centuries on Li dis de l'erbe, de la goutte en l’aïne and other quack monologues by Rutebeuf. Less convincing is his attempt to identify Rutebeuf as the secular source of the comic and satirical elements in the merchant scene, and to categorize all earlier religious stage quacks, such as those of the thirteenth-century Prague, Benediktbeuern and Tours merchant scenes, as respectable sedentary 'urban merchants' lacking any comic elements.\textsuperscript{12} Religious stage practice was almost certainly a major influence on the dramatic quack monologues of Rutebeuf, himself author of the religious play Miracle de Théophile. His 'secular' monologues are likely to have drawn on his observations of stage quacks as well as genuine charlats, and his creative and economic impetus may well have come from an awareness of the growing importance of quacks in religious drama. Hard and fast distinctions between the categories of quack and merchant, of the type proposed by MATHIEU, cannot take account of the ways in which these roles were interpreted on the stage. If some specialists suggest that comic elements first entered the merchant scene with the early fourteenth-century Passion Ba-

\textsuperscript{11} 101

Latinus, others, more open to non-textual factors, already detect a comic dimension to that of the thirteenth century Tours text. It seems highly probable that well before being explicitly recorded in scripts, at least some religious productions visually exploited the comic possibilities of the quack through costume or gesture. The verbal comic possibilities are richly reflected in many later scripts. Where they are not, as in the merchant scenes of the fifteenth-century Wolfenbüttel and sixteenth-century Hall and Lucerne cycles, this may as often be a prudent response to censorship in the written version, as an accurate reflection of an absence of any comic dimension in the actual performances. In the earlier, largely Latin productions, even performing in the vernacular gave quacks, from those of the eleventh-century Sponsus onwards, hugely comic resonances for an audience used to hearing physicians mock itinerant healers for their lack of Latin.

In the merchant scene's most fully developed versions, the lone quack was replaced with a couple-led troupe, and his essentially brief selling routine to the three Marys was padded out with bawdy comic interchanges of total biblical irrelevance. In a lengthy comic scene of a largely secular nature, the troupe typically prepare and market their products. They puff their skills, barter and banter with the Holy women, crack jokes of a surprisingly robust nature, and conclude by packing up to continue their travels, often going their separate ways after a quarrel between the quack couple. In the fourteenth-century Brandenburg quack troupe, the familiar wife and second servant supplementing the stock roles Meister Ypocrates and his servant Pusterback bear the non-standard names Baptonia and Surgan, and the troupe starts with a comic drinking routine not found elsewhere. Later plays, such as those of Innsbruck (1391), Vienna (1472), Alsfeld and Erlau (fifteenth century) and Bozen (1514) increasingly standardize both the names and comic stage business of their quacks (see Appendix). The merchant scene of the Erlau Easter play, thought to originate from early fifteenth-century Kärnten in Austria, takes up the first 940 of the 1331 verses of the play's third scene. A stage direction at its very beginning, instructing the quacks' senior assistant to announce the merchant scene in prologue form, underlines its optional and improvisational nature. The Erlau merchant scene is particularly informative concerning the troupe's medical products, and the division of labour between the quack couple, Medicus and Medica. Offstage, the couple has young children and a maid, Gredlein. Onstage, they have two male assistants, a senior one called Rubinus and a junior called Pusterpalkh. Medicus introduces himself at the beginning of the merchant scene as a skilled master of noble birth from Asia, lately come from Paris. He claims to have brought the troupe's medicines from Milan, Flanders and Arabia, and ends the merchant scene by leaving the stage with Pusterpalkh, to 'return to Arabia'.

When the Erlau play's Medicus gives Rubinus the task of publicising his medical products and services, he starts by describing the troupe's self-manufactured pharmaceuticals and cosmetics. Assuring the crowd that they were brought by his master from distant lands, he offers them eight individually described ungquets. Two are purely medical, respectively for healing wounds and physical disabilities, one is an ointment aimed at men with slothful or nagging wives, another at women with physically abusive men, and a fifth restores women's virginity. Three others are cosmetic, namely a face rouge and hair bleach for women, and a hair restorative for men. Rubinus' eulogy includes many of the standbys familiar from quack monologues, handbills and pictures. Tooth extraction, lithotomies and the administration of enemas are all alluded to in a speech which is an early and lengthy example of the quack harangue. It even includes the interpretation of urine, identified by some as the main additional comic theme differentiating the secular dramatic quack episodes of carnival farces from their closely related religious counterparts. Unusually, the Erlau play's merchant scene includes a counterpart to this speech, giving detailed insights into the abilities of the quack's wife, whose appellation, Medica, indicates her active and informed involvement in the family business. She interrupts Rubinus to request the second assistant, Pusterpalkh, to enumerate her medical skills. This second monologue is largely disregarded in the older scholarship, or dismissed as a minor addition, a mere bawdy encore of Rubinus' harangue included only for comic repetition. In fact, comparison of the two monologues suggests a genuine division of labour between husband and wife, with the former covering routine surgical operations, including dental care, and the latter offering marriage guidance, coun-

17 RUPERECHT WIMMER analyses typical textual components of several German merchant scenes in Deutsch und Latein im Osterpiel, Untersuchungen zu den volkssprachlichen Entsprechungs-texten der lateinischen Strophenlieder, München 1974, p. 78-104.
19 Here p. 54-5, 75, 80.
20 Here p. 65-6.
21 HAMMER (note 8), p. 251.
vocal evidence that the 1514 production did feature a merchant scene, significant for establishing that the absence of quacks from religious dramatic texts does not rule out their presence in performance, has been largely overlooked. This evidence is four quacks listed in the cycle’s cast lists as being played by two pairs of relatives, and a fifth player.29 The quack (Medicus) and his servant (Servus medicy) were played by Marx Pader and the cutler Jacob Balbirer. The quack’s wife (Usor medicy) was shared by Sigmund Balbirer (who lived on the main square) and the Mullerin in der Hell, and her maid (puella medicy) was played by “Plasy Paders tochter”. Although members of both families took on several other roles too,30 it is surely no coincidence that the 1514 merchant scene was played by the Paders and the Balbirers, and highly likely that their performances drew heavily on the medical connections suggested by their family names. Barber-surgeons, whether attached to bathhouses (‘Bader’) or not (‘Barbierer’) were sedentary health practitioners whose commercial practice overlapped considerably with that of the quack troupes who competed directly for their clients. Numerous urban by-laws restrict the activities of itinerant performing quacks. Far from showcasing guest appearances by professional players from visiting troupes, as some have suggested, the merchant scene appears to have represented a welcome opportunity for medical practitioners of a particular community and local citizens close to them to rally against outsiders who commercially threatened them, and to ridicule and undermine the commercial credibility of their itinerant rivals.31

30 Michael Pader was cast as both Quartas emptor and Simeon propheta, his son as a peasant, and Jorg Pader as Primus miles Herodis, while Jacob Balbirer was also cast as the servants of Simon and Joseph, and his kinsman Sigmund Balbirer played Rabbi Samuel and John the Baptist.

31 Raber’s casting supports the suggestion made by LINKE, Unstimmige Opposition (note 8), p. 102, that the increasing secularization of such interludes is marked by a notable change of emphasis, from contrast to the perfection of Christ and Heaven, to ridicule of itinerants.
The text of the 'Raber Passion' follows that of the 1511 Hall Passion closely enough to suggest that this may have provided the model for its unscripted merchant scene. The four-strong troupe of the 1511 playtext, the quack Ipo-crus, his servant Rubein, wife Medica, and her maid Virgo, corresponds to the generically named foursome of the 1514 cast list. As scripted, the 1511 merchant scene is virtually free of scatological or sexual innuendo, portraying the quack couple and their maid and manservant not as an anarchic roving troupe, but as a polite and well-run municipal household. Although for the older schol-larship, the simple, unhallowed nature of this scene points to an early version of the merchant scene, hints of the hard-sell patter and robust comic dialogue that are such a dominating feature of some Easter plays gleam through its speeches. In fact, early German versions of the merchant scene feature especially robust humour, and it is not impossible that the 1511 version was sanitized for publication.33 Although the hugely popular merchant scene is completely absent from the 1514 Bozen Passion cycle, as from most South Tyrolean texts, this does not mean, as some specialists have assumed, that quacks only rarely featured in actual performances of the region. Like the 1511 Hall Passion, Vigil Raber's 1520 Ludus Pascalis features a fully scripted merchant scene.34 An explanation for the presence of quacks in the 1514 Bozen cast, despite their complete absence from the play text, is offered by the single mention of quacks in yet another South Tyrolean play text. A sentence at the appropriate point in the 1486 text of Lienhard Pfarrkircher's Passion notes, in Latin: "here you may introduce the doctor and his servant, if you wish".35 This is significant for establishing both that merchant scenes did not exclude mystery plays from being staged within churches, and that the abscence of quacks from their texts does not rule out their presence on the stage.
Evidently, the bawdy merchant scene, hugely popular with audiences but rather less so with the clergy, could be introduced into specific performances of mystery plays as an optional extra, unscripted in the text.
The obvious starting points for tracing the geographic origins and diffusion of merchant scenes and other religious quack scenes are the flawed but magisterial works of KARL YOUNG and WAL Th LIPPHARDT:36 Some five percent of LIPPHARDT’s thousand or so Latin and largely Latin Easter texts note unguents or spices being taken to the tomb of Christ by the three Marys. Of these, only thirteen explicitly feature merchant scenes with one onstage merchant, and just two specify more than one merchant.37 These last, both dating to the thirteenth century, are the Tours Ludus paschali, with two male quacks, and the Benediktbeuerer Easter play, perhaps the earliest text to specify a quack couple in its merchant scene. The theory that the Visitatio sepulchri provided the initial impetus, from which the merchant scene grew quasi-organically from the liturgy, and that it only "gradually abandoned also the Latin of the liturgy in favour of the language of ordinary life",38 is widely accepted as a convenient truism. Overwhelmingly, female religious stage quacks occur in one well-defined narrow contextual range, that of mixed-gender quack troupes in the merchant scenes of the German or Bohemian Visitatio sepul-chri. From the start, male quacks also featured in other narrative contexts, and no serious enquiry into religious stage quacks can ignore their sporadic appearances outside the Visitatio sepulchri (see appendix). Plays unrelated to the Easter story including merchants or medical practitioners unlikely to have been played as quacks, because they were clearly sedentary physicians, surgeons, midwives or apothecaries on the one hand, or not obviously medically active on the other, include numerous late fourteenth-century Italian rappresentazione sacre.39 Rarely, as in the Limoges Sponsus or The Blyssed Sacrament of 1461, plays of this first category feature indisputable quacks.
Secondly, a few quacks occur in plays presenting the Easter story without a merchant scene, either because it has not survived or because they were written or played without one, as with the Magdalene quack scenes of the Benediktbeuerer Passion Play or Wiener Passion Fragment. A surprisingly popular feature is a second quack scene before or after the merchant scene, as in the Muri, Pfafferser, Erlau III, Villinger or Semur plays (or even a third, as in the Text of the Berliner (rheinisches) Osterspiel). This third category demonstrates a significant structural element of medieval religious plays, particularly apparent in, for example the Semur Passion, namely the repetition of roles, locations, props and other visual elements through the use of parallel scenes.40

32 WACKERNEll (note 29), p. CCCCXXVII, p. 331-337.
33 Here p. CCCCXII-CXXXIII, p. 331-7 (see, eg, lines 1356-1375, 1397-1412). On the sanitation of textual merchant scenes, see SCHIPKE/PEISEL (note 16), p. 88-9.
34 ROLOFF/TRAUB/LIPPHARDT (note 29), vol. III, p. 211-218, 313-316.
35 Hic potes introdurre medicum cum servo suo, si placet. ROLOFF/TRAUB/LIPPHARDT (note
36 YOUNG (note 14); WALThER LIPPHARDT: Lateinische Osterfeiern und Osterspiele (= LOO), 9
37 Fifteen texts in LOO specify onstage quacks (one male: LOO nos. 799, 801-4, 804a, 805, 822-3, 825, 827-9; two males: LOO no. 824; or a couple: LOO no. 830).
39 The appendix, below, can only indicate a random few examples for this category, peripheral to the present argument. Observettes, or midwives, for example, represent a significant religious comic stock role; see ALLARGYCE NICOLL: Masks, mimes and miracles, studies in the popular theatre, London 1931, p. 184. For other healers in religious plays, see also here p. 186. Midwives feature in eleven of the seventeen French nativity plays analysed by ROVOL (note 15), p. 530. He also analyses the roles of twenty-four French Easter plays and seven other biblical plays. Only two of each, respectively those of Origny and Tours, and the Sponsus play and Laon Ordo Joseph, include one or more merchants; see here p. 529, 531.
40 THEO STEMMER: Liturgische Feiern und geistliche Spiele, Tübingen 1970, p. 128-132; P. T.
p. 173.
Although YOUNG, unlike LIPPHARDT, does not restrict his collection entirely to Latin Easter texts, gaining any kind of systematic overview of vernacular and non-Easter quack-related texts is surprisingly unstraightforward, especially as much of the vast secondary literature predates significantly recently-discovered sources.41 Whether or not the monastery of St Martial of Limoges is, as has been claimed, ‘the true creator of the liturgical drama in France and perhaps in Europe’,42 it seems likely that the religious quack episode was created at St Martial. By 1200, it was spreading from there through France, Spain and further afield.43 Taken as a whole, its distribution pattern, in Latin and macaronic religious texts, indicates a rapid initial diffusion to Eastern German-speaking Europe during the thirteenth century, complimented by a much slower spread north and southwards, and back into the central German-speaking regions, continuing into the sixteenth century. Quacks became increasingly, though never exclusively, associated with the Visitatio sepulchri, and the merchant scene became more and more important to the Easter play. The mercator iuvenis who shares the stage with the three Marys at the tomb of Christ in Verses pascales de III Mfarrisj, a text of c. 1100 from Vich in Spain, has been identified as “the earliest example of an extra-biblical addition to the Easter Visitatio play”, in “the oldest extant scene in the biblical drama”,44 namely the Visitatio sepulchri. The Vich Easter performance is widely regarded as containing “the original literary kernel of the merchant scene”, and despite the numerous religious and secular non-Easter quack episodes known to specialists, for many, it is beyond question that the quack episode originated with the dramatic Easter ceremonies.45 However, indisputably one of the earliest speaking stage quacks is an oil-seller whose script is recorded not in Latin but in the Romance dialect. He is associated not with the Visitatio sepulchri, but featured in the macaronic Sporsus, a mystery play from Limoges based on the parable of the wise and foolish virgins.46 Because of the Limoges and Vich plays’ similar dating, there is no agreement on which is ear-

41 The highly important Melk, Brandenburger and Pfäferser texts, for example, were first published only in 1948, 1986 and 2006. My thanks to Max Siller and Klaus Amana for drawing this last to my attention; SCHICKLE/PENZEL (note 16); CURT F. BECHLER & CARL SELMER: The Melk Salbenkränzerspiel, an unpublished middle high German mercator play. In: Publications of the Modern Language Association of America 63 (1948), p. 38-62; KLAUS AMANN: Das Pfäferser Passionsspiel. Edition, Untersuchung, Kommentar, Innsbruck 2006; see also Appendix, below.

42 EDITH A. WRIGHT: The dissemination of the liturgical drama in France, Bryn Mawr, Penn. 1936, p. 31.

50 NICOLL (note 39), p. 186.

51 HARDIN CRAIG: English religious drama of the middle ages, Oxford 1967, p. 34. CRAIG incorrectly suggests that the role of the religious quack became a speaking part only in the fourteenth century.

44NICOLL (note 39), p. 186.
45HARDIN CRAIG: English religious drama of the middle ages, Oxford 1967, p. 34. CRAIG incorrectly suggests that the role of the religious quack became a speaking part only in the fourteenth century.
discounted the possibility that they could be a coherent part of any sophisticated dramatic or didactic strategy. Typically, they denounced them as indecent, "loathsome smut", whose "vile filth" was of possible appeal only to the lowest social strata.\textsuperscript{52} Similar views were far from unknown at the time of the performances themselves. In her twelfth century tract, Hortus Deliciarum, the Abbess of Hohenburg, Herrad of Landsberg, concludes that, despite their didactic value, the disorder and fouling around they precipitated justified the prohibition of religious plays.\textsuperscript{53} In his Tractatus de precatione Dei, John Hus bitterly regrets his youthful involvement in the "outrage and infamy" of the late fourteenth century religious plays staged inside Prague cathedral.\textsuperscript{54} The belligerent peasant actors of Eulenspiegel's thirteenth tale, and the subversive, unruly devils of François Rabelais' fictionalized account of François Villon's passion play rehearsal, offer extreme literary examples of the religious stage's potential for ungodly folly.\textsuperscript{55} Comparable folly was denounced in Martin Luther's detailed critique of the comic elements of Passion and Easter plays:

Und sonderlich ist das unchristlich, wo man solche narrentreu treyht ynn der gemeyne, da man zu samen kompt Gotts wort zu hören und die schrifft zu lernen, wie sichs denn alle zeyt begibt, wo viel zu samen komen, ob sie gleich zu erst anfahen von ernsten sachen, doch bald fallen auff leichtfertige, lose, lecherliche teydinge, damit man die zeyt verleuret und bessers verseueme. Wie denn bisher geschehn ist, das man auff osterfest ein nervrischer lecherlich geschwitzt unter die predigt gemengt hat, die schleutteren damit wacker zu machen […] und mit reymen affenspiel getrieben hat, gleich auch mit […] der passio Christi […]\textsuperscript{56}

Medieval precedents notwithstanding, the disgusted reaction of modern scholars to the obscurity of religious stage plays is now viewed as unhistorical, and they have long since achieved recognition as one of the more complex products of medieval performance culture.\textsuperscript{57} The merchant scene has been re habilitated within a flourishing literary tradition, and increasingly, non-textual approaches are providing further perspectives, by reclaiming the visual record, and performative aspects of religious plays such as dance, acrobatics and above all music. While there is no consensus concerning the dramatic function of religious stage quacks, and those outside the Easter context continue to attract little critical attention, a dazzling spectrum of theories attempts to account for the merchant scene's inclusion in mystery plays. The former frontrunner, that it reflects elements of pre-Christian Germanic pagan folk ritual, although heavily tainted by ideological concerns, still informs suggestions that the merchant scene integrates pagan and Christian aspects of the Easter resurrection festival. In an article first published in 1974, Jakobson identifies one episode, of one merchant scene, as the key to their interpretation as burlesque analogues of Christ's resurrection, namely the mastickår's restoration to life of the boy Isaac, in the fourteenth century Bohemian 'Museum fragment'.\textsuperscript{58} For him, the quack is the quasi-shaman star of a scene, combining liturgical and folklore elements grounded in the common substratum of 'pre-Christian rites'. He suggests that they are intended to burlesque and ridicule the liturgy, to promote in spectators the death-defying risus paschalis or ritual laughter traditionally associated with religious celebrations of the triumph of life over death. Defying the central (and insurmountable) dilemma of having to prove a direct, unbroken performative continuity between shamanistic ritual and religious stage quacks, he interprets the merchant scene as saluting Easter "not as a compromise with paganism, but as a Christian tradition in its own right".\textsuperscript{59} This viewpoint has proved extremely influential.\textsuperscript{60} Others variously promote the merchant scene as a diverting counterbalance to the religious tension of the plays' biblical content, as social satire, or as a device for drawing spectators into the dramatic action on a personal level.\textsuperscript{61} Yet another perspective identifies the religious quack episode as a quasi-autonomous secular farce, with origins inspired by literature or popular drama. Some scholars view it as a stepping stone towards artistic freedom, a 'ready made' play within a play, even as a "comic carcosa".\textsuperscript{62} They suggest that it was written and perhaps performed not by the amateurs responsible for mystery plays as a whole, but by mountebanks drawing on their own professional stage repertoires, or by \textsuperscript{52} \textsc{Creizenach} (note 13), p. 244, 357.

\textsuperscript{53} \textsc{Young} (note 14), vol. II, p. 412-14.

\textsuperscript{54} \textsc{Roman Jakobson}: Medieval mock mystery (the old Czech Unguentaries). In: Selected writings, V1.2, Berlin 1985, p. 666-90, here p. 667.

\textsuperscript{57} \textsc{Jakobson} (note 54), p. 681.

\textsuperscript{58} Published with an English translation by \textsc{Veltruský}, A sacred farce (note 5), p. 333-57.

\textsuperscript{59} Here p. 330.

\textsuperscript{60} \textsc{Jakobson} (note 54), p. 685; \textsc{František Sverkosky}: Vetulia-Episode im Melker Salbenkritischerspiel. In: Zeitschrift für deutsche Philologie 87 (1968), p. 1-16; \textsc{Warning} (note 3), p. 78-80. See also p. 113-119, where he too discusses the merchant scene in relation to the \textit{risus paschalis}.

\textsuperscript{61} \textsc{Craig} (note 51), p. 34; \textsc{Holl} (note 22), p. 10-15; \textsc{Nicoll} (note 39), p. 180; \textsc{Rolf Steinbach}: Die deutschen Oster- und Passionsspiele des Mittelalters, Köln 1970, p. 34-5.

The Latin content of many merchant scenes weigh against the authorship of professional quacks, if not students. The castlists of the 1514 Bozen Passion confirm that quack roles, no less than any others, could be assigned to respected members of the local church community. Although variants of this theory still receive sporadic support from some quarters, it is clear that merchant scenes were not acted by genuine performing quacks.

Linke lucidly explains the theological reasoning behind the comic elements of the Easter quack episode. He plausibly identifies the dramatic function of the merchant scene as the provision of a secular setting, within the biblical story, that serves to heighten the intensity of religious plays' theologically motivated contrast between profane and spiritual concerns, not by glorifying worldly pleasures, but by ridiculing them. Viewed in this perspective, the merchant scene occupies a significant place in the tradition of Narrenliteratur (Folly Literature), in which court or stage fools stand as powerful metaphors for the frailties and temptations of the human condition. Its quacks exemplify human folly by demonstrating concrete examples simultaneously intended as secular entertainment, didactic and religious instruction, and in the medical sense of therapeutic laughter, intended to actively promote healing in its audience. This tradition's multiple intentions are demonstrated with unusual clarity by a medical treatise of 1610, in which the deeply religious South Tyrolean physician Hippolytus Guarinomius frames, within a moralising context, over thirty descriptions of professional stage business performed by marketplace commedia dell'arte-performing quacks. Several concern scatological comic stage business, or lazzos, considerably more explicit than anything offered by the Easter play texts, that evoke the sheer exuberant physicality of quack stage business in a way that no play text can. Thus they provide dramatic exempla offering his readers a literal cure for folly, by warning them against the sins and the vices. Despite concerning the textual use of secular dramatic descriptions in a seventeenth century medical treatise, the passage of 1612 in which Guarinomius explicates this intention affords valuable insights into the reasoning behind the use of bawdy quack humour on the late medieval religious stage. In it, Guarinomius robustly admonishes a reader who challenges the comic epi-

The religiously-motivated didactic agenda of the robustly 'sex 'n shopping' orientated comic routines of the mixed-gender quack troupes of the religious stage was broadly comparable to that of Guarinomius. In effect, these comic stage quacks were deployed to lure mystery play spectators in as quasi-extras with their sales-pitch. Through them, the churchmen who sponsored and supported these plays aimed to inspire their congregations to recognize and laugh at their own human folly, and to reject it in favour of spiritual redemption. But ultimately, religious quack episodes were so successful and persistent because they worked on many levels. They contrasted the oral rhetoric and physicality of street performers with the literary approach of religious drama, and drew on community, congregational and guild loyalties, and carnivalesque, folkloric, commercial and medical as well as didactic resonances. As pure entertainment, the episode can be enjoyed as a hugely popular quasi-secular attraction that widens the base of spectators for religious plays. It does this by evoking the atmosphere of the earliest, most longstanding and most successful form of commercial promotion, namely the harangues and theatrical shows offered by marketplace quacks. To a certain extent these are parodied in literary forms such as Rutebeuf's mid thirteenth century quack monologues. But self-parody was in any case a traditional component of all but the least sophisticated quack harangues. Marketplace quacks understood that laughter promotes... economic success, by engaging audience attention and encouraging relaxed spending, and they pitched their performances accordingly. As parody, religious quacks worked not by inventing genuine quack rhetoric, but by heightening it. Nor did they rely on wholesale borrowings from ‘secular’ literary quack parodies, transplanted into religious plays with minimal regard for liturgical issues. Genuine medieval quacks created their wide spectrum of performative comic business and monologues within a thriving interdependent literary tradition, that produced texts geared to the didactic and economic agendas of the religious and secular stage, as well as to the robust orality of marketplace rhetoric.

Conclusions

The confinement of religious stage quacks to the merchant scene, and the standardization of its familiar cast and comic business within the Visitatio sepulchri, was never complete. Rather than as one unique response to the specific liturgical situation of the three Marys at the tomb of Christ, the religious quack episode has a self-contained, improvisational nature reminiscent of the professional stage. It shares this and other characteristics of the transferrable popular secular comic stage business or lazioni that are the stock in trade of the commedia dell’arte. However disparate their liturgical contexts, the possibility that the earliest religious quack episodes, and notably those from Vich and Limoges, were independent literary creations, seems remote enough to be completely beyond coincidence. Questions concerning the precise dating or linguistic analysis of the surviving manuscripts are obscured by the fact that many are based, to whatever extent, on significantly earlier texts or performance practice. Although issues of precedence surrounding early stage quacks remain unresolved, it is clear that their development on the medieval religious stage is crucial to an understanding of their impact on literature and drama. Religious stage quacks mark a significant early milestone in the development of the quack harangue and the quack quarrel as literary conventions, and cast long shadows over the figure of the quack in early modern literature. Additionally, they may be viewed as foreshadowing several significant strategies of the professional comic stage. Their three central stock characters, the quack, his wife and their servant, may be compared to the commedia dell’arte stage master-servant-inamorata trio. Their popular comic set-piece shares the characteristic potential of lazioni for improvisation, transferal from one play or dramatic situation to another, and extension or curtailment according to the requirements of individual audiences or sponsors. The comic stage business and stock roles of religious quack episodes deserve recognition as a significant potential source for certain of the most characteristic and popular dramatic strategies and roles of the early professional stage.

Appendix: Chronological overview of some medieval religious stage quacks

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>DATE</th>
<th>NAME / TYPE</th>
<th>DOCUMENT / LANGUAGE / REFERENCE</th>
<th>QUACKS</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>11th-12th cent</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>c. 1100</td>
<td>Le Sponsus (Mystère des Veriges auge et des Veriges folles)</td>
<td>Text (30 of 105 verses) [Latin &amp; Romance: YOUNG (note 14), II, p. 362-4]</td>
<td>5x foolish virgin 2m or couples or more than 2 [Mercator-marchants]</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>13th cent</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>c. 1200</td>
<td>Incipit Ordo paschalis Klosterneuburger OS, nr Wien</td>
<td>Text [Latin: LOO 829]</td>
<td>3x Marys 1M [Specianarius]</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>c. 1230</td>
<td>Benediktbeurer PS (Carmina Burana) Seckau, nr Knittelfeld, Austria</td>
<td>Text [Latin &amp; German: HARTL, p. 12-23]</td>
<td>M. Magd in house of Simon the Pharisee buys cosmetics / repents / returns to buy unguents Couple [mercator-venditor-chemer-mercator iuvenis / uxor suad]</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>c. 1230</td>
<td>[Großes] Benediktbeurer OS (Carmina Burana) Seckau, nr Knittelfeld</td>
<td>Text [Latin &amp; German: LOO 830]</td>
<td>3x Marys Couple [Apothecarius-mercator iuvenis / Uxor apothecura]</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Mid 13th cent</td>
<td>Ludus paschali [Tours] Normandy</td>
<td>Text (54 of 315 verses) [Latin: LOO 824]</td>
<td>3x Marys 2M [mercator-mercator iuvenis / alius mercator-Domine]</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>13th cent</td>
<td>Berthold of Regensburg (d.1272)</td>
<td>Sermon</td>
<td>3x Marys identifies servants of merchant scene as devils [Pusterbalk / Lasterbalk]</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

69 My thanks to Matthew Peacock for advising on the Latin.
70 EDUARD HARTL: Das Benediktbeurer Passionsspiel, das St. Gallen Passionsspiel, nach den Handschriften herausgegeben, Halle/Saale 1952.
DATE | NAME / TYPE | DOCUMENT /LANGUAGE /REFERENCE | QUACKS
---|---|---|---
Late 13th or 14th cent | Gerona Barcelona | Text [Latin: LOO 822] | 3x Marsyas 1M [Mercator]

14th cent | | | |

c. 1300 | Prague, St George Convent | Text [Latin: LOO 799] | 3x Marsyas rubrics imply singing part

14th cent | Prague, St George Convent | Text [Latin: LOO 801] v10 | 3x Marsyas 1M [Unguentarius]

14th cent | Prague, St George Convent | Text [Latin: LOO 802] v10 | 3x Marsyas 1M [Unguentarius]

14th cent | Prague, St George Convent | Text, silent part, v14 [Latin: LOO 803] | 3x Marsyas 1M [Unguentarius]

14th cent | Prague, St George Convent | Text [Latin: LOO 804] | 3x Marsyas 1M [Unguentarius]

14th cent | Prague, St George Convent | Text [Latin: LOO 804] | 3x Marsyas 1M [Unguentarius]

14th cent | Prague, St George Convent | Text, v7 [Latin: LOO 805] | 3x Marsyas 1M [Unguentarius]

2. An account of c. 1312-14 summarizing the convent’s Easter ceremonies for the nun Heüzü de Conflans does not note the merchant scene, perhaps introduced by her to this convent [French: WRIGHT (note 42), p. 184-6]

DATE | NAME / TYPE | DOCUMENT /LANGUAGE /REFERENCE | QUACKS
---|---|---|---
First 3rd of 14th cent | Pfäferser PS-Fragment | Text, 350vv, f2, vv87-95, 132-190 [Latin & Alemanic: AMANN (note 41)] | 2 quack scenes: Nico Pharaoh 1M [vili lieber cramer-medicus vngen- turum]

3x Marsyas Couple [apothecarius-cramar juvaines-junger cramer-iuglinae-medicus-vil lieber cramer-vil lieber maister / vxor medieci]

1st half of 14th cent | Frankfurter OS-Fragment | Text [Latin & German: JANOTA, 78, I, p. 422-4] | 3x Marsyas 1M [kaufman-mercator-mercator pri-mus]

2 Birth of Christ: midwife in birth scene [Salome-femme sage]

3 Miracle of the Virgin: non-medical merchant [merchant]

77 MARIUS SEPHÉ: Origines catholiques du théatre moderne, Paris 1889.

78 CAMILLE CHABANEAU: Sainte Marie Madeleine dans la littérature provençale, recueil des textes provençaux, Paris 1887.

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>DATE</th>
<th>NAME / TYPE</th>
<th>DOCUMENT / LANGUAGE / REFERENCE</th>
<th>QUACKS</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>14th cent</td>
<td>Berlin-thüringisches OS-Fragment</td>
<td>Text, 160v; [Latin &amp; German: SEELMANN, 80 1926]</td>
<td>3x Marys Couple &amp; 2nd M &amp; old female client [Mercator-herre meyster min-arzt-eyme kunstigen man / Rubinier lieber knect min-junger jungelino-lieb jungelinseliger knappe iung / min vonvre vor Atonhia / eyme alden wibe]</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Mid 14th cent</td>
<td>Mastičák</td>
<td>Text, 431 lines [Latin &amp; Bohemian: VELTRUSKY: A sacred farce (note 5), p. 332]</td>
<td>3x Marys Couple &amp; 2M &amp; 2x clients [mercator Ypocras-nistere Severine-mercator iuvenis / Rubinos-Rubin z Benatek (i.e. of Venice) / Pustpark / uxor mercatoris / Abraham &amp; son Isaac]</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>c. 1425</td>
<td>Wolfenbütteler OS</td>
<td>Text [Latin &amp; German: FROWING (note 70), 60-2]</td>
<td>3x Marys 2M [mercator-mercator iuvenisguide man-cramer-Meister / Robin-leue jengelin]</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>c. 1440</td>
<td>La Passion Nostre Seigneur</td>
<td>Text, 4476v: vv. 4112-4263 [French: GALA-GHER, 82]</td>
<td>3x Marys 1M [l’espicerie-Sire]</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

81 JULES-MARIE RICHARD: Le mystère de la Passion, Paris 1891.
<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>DATE</th>
<th>NAME / TYPE</th>
<th>DOCUMENT / LANGUAGE / REFERENCE</th>
<th>QUACKS</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>2nd half of 15th cent</td>
<td>La rappresentazione dell'ortolano eclemosione Italy</td>
<td>Text [Italian &amp; Latin: BANI (note 83), p. 511-36: 527-33]</td>
<td>L'ortolano 3M [primo medico-maestro / secondo medico / terzo medico-reverende magister]</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>2nd half of 15th cent</td>
<td>La rappresentazione del re superbo Italy</td>
<td>Text [Italian: BANI (note 83), p. 471-599: 484-7]</td>
<td>Il re superbo 2M [primo medico-maestro / secondo medico-maestro]</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>2nd half of 15th cent</td>
<td>Lüheiner OS-Fragment</td>
<td>Text [German: see SEELE-MANN (note 78), p. 259-61]</td>
<td>3x Marys 3M &amp; 1F [medicus / Rubin / Pusterbalg / mercatix]</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

84 ALESSANDRO D'ANCONA Origeni del teatro italiano. Libri tre con due appendici, Roma 1966.

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>DATE</th>
<th>NAME / TYPE</th>
<th>DOCUMENT / LANGUAGE / REFERENCE</th>
<th>QUACKS</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>1486</td>
<td>Jehan Michel (based on Arnoû Gréban, 1452) Le Mystère de la Passion Anger</td>
<td>Text, 29924vv: vv. 29175-29302 [French: MICHAEL; 428-30]</td>
<td>Nicodemus bays spices offstage while montage the widowed cloth-merchant Julye (who also appears in several other scenes) sells Joseph Jesus’s grave-cloth 1F [Julye, veufve, mere de l’adolescent-marchande des suaires]</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1491</td>
<td>Egmund nr Utrecht, St Adalbert</td>
<td>Text [Latin: LOO 827]</td>
<td>3x Marys 1M [mercator juvenis-specianarius]</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>DATE</th>
<th>NAME / TYPE</th>
<th>DOCUMENT /LANGUAGE /REFERENCE</th>
<th>QUACKS</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>c. 1495</td>
<td>Johan Michel: Mystère de la Résurrection de Notre Seigneur Jésus-Christ</td>
<td>Text [French: ABRAHAMS (note 10); p. 116; MATHIEU (note 12), p. 66-7]</td>
<td>3x Marys &amp; Johanna (Herod’s wife) 1M [apoticaire-espicier]</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>c. 1495</td>
<td>Antonia Pulci (1452-1501)</td>
<td>Text [Italian: BANDI (note 83), p. 537-81; 569-75]</td>
<td>Santa Guglielma cures a leper 2M [uno medico / uno altro medico]</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1496</td>
<td>Harlem Fragment</td>
<td>Single role text [Latin: LOO 828]</td>
<td>3x Marys 1M [Phisicus]</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>16th cent</td>
<td>Egerer Frontleichenamsspiel (Eger, Hungary, formerly Erlau)</td>
<td>Text, vv. 7864-7901 [Latin &amp; German: MILCHSACK⁹¹]</td>
<td>3x Marys 2M [mercator / Rubini]</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1503 (copy)</td>
<td>Le Mystère de Saint Antoine de Viennois Briançon, France</td>
<td>Text: 3966 vv / vv. 1859-2290 [Provençal; GUILLAUME,⁹² p. 67-83]</td>
<td>A courtier sells St Anthony’s belongings to comic (but non-medical) merchants 3M [Primus mercator / secundus mercator / tertius mercator-Johan dal Molis]</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

---

⁹¹ GUSTAV MILCHSACK: Egerer Frontleichenamsspiel, Tübingen 1881.
⁹² PAUL GUILLAUME: Le mystère de Sant Anthoni de Vienmés, publié d’après une copie de l’an 1503, Gap, Paris 1884.

---

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>DATE</th>
<th>NAME / TYPE</th>
<th>DOCUMENT /LANGUAGE /REFERENCE</th>
<th>QUACKS</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>1516-26</td>
<td>Ludus pasce</td>
<td>Codex Clementinum Bohemia</td>
<td>1 Text [Czech &amp; Latin; VELTRUSKY: A sacred farce (note 5), p. 116, 126] 3x Marys 1M [urus Barbarus falcitus ad morem medic]</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>7157</td>
<td>Henrich Hültscher, d.1547</td>
<td>Alsfelder Kaufmannsrolle</td>
<td>Single role text, 44v [Latin &amp; German: JANOTA (note 72), II, p. 193, 197-8, 209] 3x Marys Couple [Primus mercator / vox]</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1538</td>
<td>Hans Salat</td>
<td>Luczerner PS Lucerne, Switzerland</td>
<td>1. Text [German: WYSS,⁹³ p. 269-71] 3x Marys 1M [Apentegger]</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1539</td>
<td>Gerona</td>
<td>nr Barcelona</td>
<td>Ecclesiastical decree [Latin: LOO V, p. 1661-2] 3x Marys permitted Apothecarius couple &amp; son and Mercator couple, prohibited moorish couple or maid or musicians</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1560</td>
<td>Zacharius Blett Luzerner PS</td>
<td>Director’s notes (Day 1) [German: EVANS (note 92), p. 156] 3x Marys Unspecified [Appotegger]</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1566</td>
<td>Lewis Wagner</td>
<td>A new enterlude, never before this time printed, entreaty of the life and repen- tance of Marie Magdalene.</td>
<td>Printed text [London 1566], M. Magd: is tempted to buy ‘swete oynments’ 1M [Infidelities, the Vice]</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>
JODY ENDERS
The Devil in the Flesh of Theater

Der merkwürdige, apokryphe Fall von Bar-le-Duc (1485), in dem ein Schauspieler noch im Teufelskostüm seine Ehefrau vergewaltigt, vereint, was nie hätte geraten werden dürfen: Ethik als Corpus des Wissens und das Körperwissen des Theaters. Der Fall erinnert uns daran, dass Theater besser (wenn auch manchmal moralisch schlechter) als jedes andere literarische Medium dazu geeignet ist, Akteure dazu zu bringen, Gedanken in die Tat umzusetzen. Da die Geschichte außerdem mit einer moralistischen Pointe aufwurtet, mit der kaum eine moderne lehrhafte Erzählung konkurrieren kann – einem missgebildeten und monströsen Kind als Erzeugnis dieser Vergewaltigung – inkarniert sie im Wortsinne ihre zentrale Aussage, dass im Theater Intentionen verkörpert werden. Indem die Anekdoten von Bar-le-Duc den Prozess der Realisierung von Theater mit der Genese des Verbrechens zusammenführt, erzählt sie von einem theatralen Herz der Finsternis, das wir die Angst vor dem unmittelbar Drohenden, dem Imminentsen nennen könnten. Diese ist für die Virtualität des Theaters ebenso relevant wie für jene der Ethik.

How dangerous was religious theater? Not just as words but as action? Not just as drama on the page but as acts on the stage? If we believe several chroniclers of Metz, something happened in 1485 that offered, quite literally, living proof that medieval theatrical life was very dangerous indeed, albeit not necessarily in the ways that one might expect.

According to the exceptionally loquacious Philippe de Vignuelles, it all happened one fine day when a certain actor, whose name is unknown, returned home after his performance in the city of Bar-le-Duc (about 250 kilometers east of Paris). We happen to know that a play was performed at all for one reason only: the terrible thing that happened afterward. One of the actors, still wearing his devil-suit, apparently proceeded to force himself on his wife:

Or avint que, en ce meneis tams, fut juez unjus a Bar le Le Duc, auquelle estoient aucuns hommes pourtant le persoynage de dyablez. Et, entre eux, en y olt ung que en son habit voulz avoir la compagnie de sa femme. Et elle le differoit, et demandoit qu'il volloit faire; et il luy respiditzt: 'Je veult', dit il, 'faire le dyable'. Et, quoy que sa femme se sceut defandre, force luy fut de obreyr.¹

¹ La Chronique de Philippe de Vignuelles. Ed. by CHARLES BRUNEAU, 4 vols., Metz 1927-33 (vol. 3), pp. 114-115. Hereafter CPV. Compare with the version that appears in Les Chroniques de la Ville de Metz, recueillies, mises en ordre et publiées pour la première fois. Le Doyen de St. Thiébault. – Jean Aubrion. – Philippe de Vignuelles. – Prailhon. – Annales Mea-