

Open Research Online

Citation

Ryan-Blackwell, Gemma; Jessica, Jackson and Haider, Sharif (2024). When and in what circumstances is Patient-Targeted Googling acceptable for health and social care professionals? A narrative review and thematic analysis. Health Informatics Journal, 30(3) pp. 1–14.

URL

<https://oro.open.ac.uk/99631/>

License

(CC-BY-NC 4.0) Creative Commons: Attribution-Noncommercial 4.0

<https://creativecommons.org/licenses/by-nc/4.0/>

Policy

This document has been downloaded from Open Research Online, The Open University's repository of research publications. This version is being made available in accordance with Open Research Online policies available from Open Research Online \(ORO\) Policies

Versions

If this document is identified as the Author Accepted Manuscript it is the version after peer review but before type setting, copy editing or publisher branding

Example from the coding framework

High level theme	Sub-theme	Sub-Code 1	Sub-code 2
Practitioner behaviours, attitudes and experience	Prevalence	Field of practice
		Positive impact on patient care
		Negative impact on patient care
	Motivations for PTG	Ethical considerations/tensions
		Arguments for the ethical use of PTG
	Consent, disclosure and documentation	Is consent required?	Yes No
		Should PTG be disclosed?	Yes No
		Should it be documented?	Yes No
Nature of online information	Authenticity/accuracy
	Relevance
When is PTG acceptable, what actions should be taken and why?	Safeguarding
	Validation of information
	Context of use of information in broader aspects of care	Not solely used for decision making  Should not replace evidence based practice and clinical decision making
When is PTG not acceptable and why?	Curiosity
	Lack of rationale
Need for education, training and guidance			